A HAPPY TIME GENERALLY.

No one who entered into the observance of yesterday's holiday with the proper spirit is vexated this morning with any twinges of headache or griping abdominal. He who arose in the brisk morning with a large realization of the bounteous dispensations with which in the past year we have been blessed, dressed himself neatly in his "Sunday-go-to-meeting" clothes, spent his morning under the droppings of the sanctuary, and the evening under the drippings of the home turkey, retiring with a thankful heart at a reasonable hour, lived as he ought to live, slept as he would like to sleep, and rose altogether the better for his day of rest thus rationally spent. There were some—not the majority, perhaps—who thus comported themselves who will bear out the truth of the assertion. Other were there too, however, who spent the day far differently, and who are suffering this morning from qualms physical and spiritual that they would gladly be rid of.

Divers and diverse are the ideas of the manner in which general holidays like that of yesterday should be spent, which obtain among the various classes of the American people. There are the lineal descendants of the Puritans, ascetic even at the Thanksgiving dinner table, chewing little and eschewing much, prompt in their attendance at church, plain in their apparel, and taking their recreation even with a grave and serious air, like that with which Pickwick did his skating. The number of these in this city is lamentably few. Then there is the tribe of Knickerbocker, more numerous in this City, fond of a good dinner, but not always so able to purchase one as their good fathers were, not loth to accept an invitation to take turkey, and capable of doing full justice to a good square meal. And then there is the great body of citizens who, so to speak, never had any fathers—sired by nobody and damned by everybody—the lazy, lubberly drones of the great Gotham hive, who live without visible means of support and allow back the deserving poor at the tables spread by charity on such occasions as these. And there are the sons of Shoddy, (who are also orphans,) who live well, eat well, worship with lip service, dress expensively, and give nothing, except for purposes of ostentation, to aid the suffering poor. Then we have the numerous company of those who labor with body or with brain for their daily bread, and generally have good appetites, but not always the wherewithal to appease them sumptuously.

The people of different races from all parts of the globe claim also a large enumeration here, who sojourn among us, do the principal part of the voting and office-holding, and clamor loudly, and not always unjustly, for the right of enjoying the customs of their native lands without let or hindrance in this lamentably free country. All according to their want were at liberty yesterday to enjoy themselves. The places of business were generally closed. The Courts were adjourned; the public buildings silent and deserted; the ringing anvil stilled; the busy loom motionless; the voices of the brokers, the auctioneers, the salesmen in the various marts of trade hushed or raised only in revelry; the hackdrivers, sans fare, without compulsion and in idleness; the barbers absent from their shops, under whose bare poles not a lathy is business was stirring; and all classes and conditions of men, except those who sell liquor, (who drove a lively trade,) and those whose business it is to chronicle in these and other columns the doings of everybody else, devoted only to the pursuit of pleasure after a brief hour or two spent by a few of them in the morning in sugaring o'er the day's excesses with devotion's vinegar at the churches. Below is given a full report of the doings at the Churches, at the public and private institutions, in the prisons, and out of doors.

THE HOWARD MISSION.

There was quite a gala day at the Howard Mission yesterday, commencing at 10:30 A. M. Musical and other exercises were held in the chapel of the Mission in New Bowery, which, with an intermission for dinner, were continued until 4 o'clock in the afternoon. A large number of the girls, inmates of the institution, were seated on raised benches at one side of the chapel, where they sang sweetly many hymns and patriotic songs, accompanied by one of the teachers at the piano. Addresses were delivered during the morning by Mr. HATCH, President of the institution, and Messrs. Callender, Fox, Phelps, Howell, Pratt and Sutton. The children then partook of a bountiful repast, which had been provided for them by the friends of the institution, and were addressed by Rev. Mr. VAN METER, Superintendent of the Mission, and Rev. Dr. HODGE. The "little wanderers" enjoyed themselves most heartily over the feast of good things which Thanksgiving Day invariably brings to them.

THE HOME FOR THE FRIENDLESS.

At the Home for the Friendless and House of Industry, in East Thirtieth-street, there were exercises appropriate to the day, held in the chapel in the afternoon and evening. These consisted of singing and recitations by the children, and brief addresses by several gentlemen visitors. Dinner was provided for the several hundreds of the inmates of the institution, of which they partook at 6 P. M., and a very bountiful repast it was provided by the many friends of this one of the most useful of our charitable institutions. A large supply of clothing for the use of these friendless ones was received during Wednesday and yesterday. The whole affair passed off with much credit to the managers of the institution, and great joy and gratification to the recipients.

FIVE POINTS HOUSE OF INDUSTRY.

At this institution the exercises continued throughout the day, commencing with singing by the children, recitations and examinations in geography, arithmetic, &c., in which they proved themselves to be proficients. At 1:30 o'clock the children marched down to the dining hall, where a most bountiful display of turkeys, chickens, roast and boiled beef, beans, pies, cakes, apples and almost everything else (the May of festivity) had been provided. An attack upon it was commenced, and the turkeys and pies disappeared with great celerity. After dinner the children again assembled in the schoolroom, and were addressed by Mr. HALLIDAY and several of the visitors, of whom there were a large number.

At 3 P. M. several hundred of the out-door poor, chiefly boys, assembled round the institution, and received a liberal supply of eatables.

FIVE POINTS MISSION.

At the Mission House some 600 children assembled, the larger ones in the chapel and the smaller in the infants' school, and went through a number of interesting exercises. A large number of the lady patronesses of the institution were present. At 5 o'clock a sumptuous repast was in readiness, and the old little ones shared these salvos as prudent in mastication as scholastic exercises. The dining tables were handsomely decorated and presented a most attractive appearance. There are now about 50 children taught in the schools of the institution. Since its commencement 2,000 children have been furnished with homes and 9,000 garments have been provided. The premises are now completing additional buildings on the lot adjoining the present building, and ask the aid of the charitably disposed to enable them to finish their undertaking.

SEVENTH WARD BOYS' LODGING HOUSE.

At the Institution, No. 311 West Eighteenth-street, under the auspices of the Children's Aid Society, yesterday, about seventy boys were provided with a Thanksgiving dinner by Messrs. WARD & GOBLIN. During the past twelve months this lodging house has furnished to the poor boys of this locality 32,408 lodgings, and has given 20,736 meals.

Some of the boys make an effort to keep themselves. We could wish that more of them could get more in idleness. Situations are found for numbers in the City, and these desirous to go West are assisted to reach that land of plenty, and when there, provided with good homes. About seventy boys were present at the dinner, which was provided by Messrs. WARD & GOBLIN.

ELEVENTH WARD BOYS' LODGING HOUSE.

The boys who sleep nightly at the Eleventh Ward Lodging House were supplied with a good Thanksgiving dinner yesterday by Mr. L. W. JAMES and Mr. Dr. R. HASLEY. Ample justice was done to the good things, and a cheery scene was presented at the table by the lively youths. A Portuguese band serenaded the house to the donors and proprietors of the best dinner they had ever had.

ST. BARNABAS HOUSE.

The Episcopal Sisters of St. Barnabas House, No. 304 Mulberry-street, celebrated Thanksgiving Day by collecting together all the poor in their neighborhood, and giving them each a substantial meal. The House numbers about sixty inmates, but yesterday over 400 poor, chiefly mission school children, had a look of the hospitality of the good Sisters, who gave them a superabundance of turkey and mince pie.

THE CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY.

The Children's Aid Society provided an excellent dinner for all the little ones that are favored with its beneficent care, at their various gathering places. Hundreds of happy faces were gathered around the bountifully-supplied tables, and yesterday's feast will be a long enjoyment known only to those whose lodging days are few. Nothing was wanting to make the feast as rich for them as that enjoyed by the children of the wealthiest. The happiness of the day will cheer their lives, which are favored with few enough of the good things of earth, for the memory of it will last and will give them something to look forward to another year.

THE MERCIFUL MISSION.

Quietly and unostentatiously Thanksgiving Day was celebrated by that most estimable City institutions, the Midnight Mission. During the past Summer the number of refugees into the Mission house in Amity-street was twice larger than that of any other year, thus reducing the funds alarmingly low; but notwithstanding this, everything was duly enjoyed yesterday, the lady having charge of the building, by the seventeen inmates for the purpose of appropriately celebrating the day. No strangers were admitted.

THE WILSON INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

At the Wilson Mission House, corner of Avenue A and Eighth-street, yesterday, Thanksgiving Day was celebrated in a pleasant manner. Afternoon the parents and children of the Industrial School met in the schoolroom and in the chapel, where they held exercises of prayer and song, and listened to an address from Rev. R. T. HALL, the pastor of the Mission Church. Afterward the parents, numbering 100 persons, sat down to an elegant repast in the dining room. After them came their children and those of the school, numbering 300, principally girls, between the ages of five and fifteen, who also partook of a bountiful supply of turkey, other substantials and fruits, all of which were furnished for the occasion by friends of the Institute. In the evening the young people, members of the Mission Church, had an agreeable social entertainment in the schoolroom. Ice cream, fruits and other delicacies, with music, vocal and instrumental, rendered the affair as enjoyable as could be desired. Some fifty persons attended.

The Association has purchased the large building, adjoining the present one, and will shortly have fifty ninety feet, as a set of lodgers, and have made alterations of the basement for a chapel, and second and third floors for the schools and industrial classes, at a cost of $18,000. Of this amount $10,000 have been raised by donations from an old building, leaving a deficit of $8,000. In this building a night refuge for homeless girls is now provided, and in other rooms parents can leave on the payment of a small sum their children while they are at work by the day. When their finances permit, the Association intend to open a reading room in connection with the Mission.

THE NEWSBOYS.

About two hundred and fifty newsboys sat down to a sumptuous Thanksgiving dinner, at the Newsboys' Home, No. 40 Park-place, at 4 o'clock last evening. For more than half an hour the boys revelled in turkey, chicken, pies, cakes and cranberry sauce. The dinner, which was the result of contributions from several friends, was both abundant and substantial. After it had been disposed of, the boys assembled in the reception room, on the third floor, where there was singing and recitation by the boys, and short addresses by several friends of the Home. The boys went through the enthusiastic exercises with a degree of enthusiasm not less than that displayed by them at the dinner. The Home is supposed throughout to be a model of cleanliness and good order.

THE PHELPS LODGE.

Thanksgiving at the "Phelps Lodge" was celebrated in a very handsome manner. Major SCHUYLER, of this City, provided an ample supply of turkeys, and Mr. Adams for all the plum pudding thought necessary for the Thanksgiving dinner. About 150 boys gathered about the tables and did ample justice to the good things so liberally provided. After dinner the boys were addressed by Major SCHUYLER, and engaged with great heartiness in singing a Thanksgiving song written by Rev. Dr. EGOTT, of Brooklyn. Mr. HOWARD POTTER had visited the Lodge during the afternoon a large basket of chestnuts and one of apples. These were distributed at the close of the exercises and made a fitting finale to all the good things that had gone before. We must not omit to add that too much praise cannot be given to Mr. GRAHAM, the superintendent, and the ladies who assisted him, for the excellent taste displayed in the decoration of the house and the tables.

THE DAY AT THE TOMBS.

Passing with rapid step from the light and cheerful streets, and vocal as they were with the shouts of children, and the laughter of happy children, the writer found himself suddenly within the walls of the City Prison.

Inside the male prison the scene was a comparatively cheerful one, as the corridors were thrown open for a few hours to the prisoners awaiting trial, and they were learning about in many group, conversing together in low tones. Although it was Thanksgiving Day, these prisoners seemed about one of the most numerous in the day's observances, the Commissioners of Public Charities and Correction having omitted the customary change in the regular diet of the Tombs.

The Tombs is not unprovided with prisoners just at present, though, as one of the keepers remarked, "they are close enough to be comfortable." But it is probable that the present number will not be soon reduced, owing to the fact that nearly a majority of those confined in the Tombs are accused of having caused the death of a fellow-creature; and the due class of criminals usually enjoy the full benefit of the law's delays, their speedy removal is very doubtful. A glance at this homicidal list, as kept in the prison books, is a suggestive one. Jerry Real, who killed Officer John Sandrick, in July, 1868, and who was tried, convicted and sentenced to the gallows, is still an inmate of the Tombs, awaiting decision of his case before the Supreme Court. Real enjoys many comforts in his cell. He seems quite easy in mind, and presented a marked contrast to the one the writer last saw him, when the hammer of the executioner was ready to fall upon the condemned upon which the law had condemned him to die. Then he was anxious, and professed to have no hope, although the day of proceedings which arrived a few hours afterward gave him a whole year of life. Yesterday he, whilst physically in the few who approached his cell and none but the appearance of one whom life was already forfeited to the vengeance of law.

GEORGE BROWN, a colored man, is locked up on a charge of poisoning his wife SARAH, in Sullivan-street, some time last Summer. The case is a very doubtful one, and Grayson will probably be soon discharged by the Grand Jury. Mr. J. HAMILTON, who convicted a hatred of "MARY" ALLEN, the notorious express robber and panel thief, in consequence of the fickleness of an abandoned woman, and who shot Wm. MADDEN in Broadway, mistaking him for his rival, is in the prison. Yesterday Small's cell fed Thomas JACKSON, the amiable Deputy Sheriff who murdered ARCHIBALD DOUGLAS in the First Ward, while quarrelling with two or three ward politicians, and who was indicted on Wednesday by the Grand Jury for murder in the first degree. His theory of "self defence," so deftly used by the Coroner's jury, is still used in Jackson's behalf, though the Jurymen smiled when they ventilated the fact.

These are the more noticeable cases, the others being THOMAS YATES, accused of causing the death of his malformed stepdaughter, in childbirth; REBECCA ULT, who stabbed THOMAS HARBERT, in West Broadway, subsequent to Patrick from a funeral; MARGARET ANDERSON, who killed JOHN HICKEY on the 9th of September, by a kick in the stomach; LYDIA GRIFFIN, a colored woman, who threw a brick at JAMES H. GRANT, also colored, and fractured his skull; PETER PERSOTS, who assaulted an old man named CORNELIUS CURATOR, subsequent to Patrick; JOHN A. GONZLEZ, accused of having dangerously wounded JOHN EDGE with a knife on the 19th of October; GEORGE GLASS, accused of being concerned in the murder of Benjamin WOOD in an up-town shanty, the business being done in prison.

HARRY LEE, the dare desperado, who murdered WILLIAM KRAMER in Allegheny MEYERS' saloon, on the 16th inst., was also an inmate of the Tombs, awaiting a hearing in the Court of Oyer and Terminer, by the request of a discharge for Lee. Coroner BRIGHAM having determined to accept bail for him. Lee wore a pair of black eyes as he emerged from the prison, though he seemed cheerful and light-hearted. Coroner BRIGHAM accepted DANIEL D. TREADWAY, of No. 254 East Twenty-fourth-street, as Lee's bondsman, in the sum of $5,000 bail, and Lee departed to see his Thanksgiving dinner in peace, the relatives of the murdered man thinking the day of repaying in coin of the realm, instead of lead, Kramer's delinquent, too unceremonly grave.

Leaving the male prison, a few steps took us to the female prison, which appeared in excellent order. A few women were in the corridors awaiting trial for minor offences, and also three or four more, spoken of in the list of homicides were visible. Through the grated door of their cells. In the Tuesday Bridge a few unfortunate women were sitting around the very hot stove. These appeared quiet and not habitual drunkards, and being of quiet disposition while free from the influence of intoxicating liquor, are cared in preference to chase the court rooms and offices of the dust and dirt daily accumulating therein. They greet all visitors with many and warm, as it is mockery of their own misery, and we were glad to leave the room where so much wretchedness was apparent.

Such were the scenes in the Tombs and in the Female Department, and as the writer passed through the clanging iron gate of the prison, he noticed two or three well-dressed women, who were patiently waiting permission to enter and convey to some imprisoned friend a mouthful of the Thanksgiving dinner, which was supposed to have jovially taken at home. The sight was a painful one, and gave a new meaning to the cause for thanksgiving enjoyed by the great mass of our people for the abundant harvests of the year, the days of peace, and the prosperity of the nation.

THE ISLAND INSTITUTIONS.

About two hundred gentlemen visited Ward's Island, at the invitation of the Commissioners of Emigration, yesterday, leaving the Battery at 10 A. M., and passed over the Willets Point route. Among the visitors were Commissioners Orrin H. Lockwood, Isaac T. Smith, Frederick Kapp and Robinson, of Auburn, and Messrs. Bernard Casserly, Bennett, John Mullaly, Duvall, A. H. Hicks and Geo. Hodgeson. The members of the Commissioners were also in attendance. On the arrival of the party on the island, an inspection was made of the various public buildings there, the engine house, the coal house, the bath house, the wash house and the drying room connected with the State Emigrant Hospital and Refuge were thrown open to the visitors, and were found to be in an exceedingly cleanly and perfect condition. Considerable attention was paid to the nurseries, which were filled with the children of immigrants. The total number of inmates on the island at present is about 1,200. They were all furnished yesterday with an extra supply of edibles.

At the conclusion of the inspection, the visitors were hospitably received at the residence of Dr. L. H. WELLS, Superintendent of the island, and subsequently returning to this City at a late hour in the afternoon.

Morning services were held on the island by Rev. Mr. Ely, for the Protestant portion, and by Rev. Father FACHENNEY in the Catholic chapel.

The inmates in the various institutions under the charge of the Commissioners of Public Charities and Correction, both Randall's Island and Blackwell's Island, were well cared for, as usual, although no formal visit was made by the Commissioners to either place.

The boys on board the school ship Mercury, Captain CRANE, were allowed holiday privileges and enjoyed themselves in a hearty manner.

TABBY RECEPTIONS.

Throughout the City, at early morn yesterday, the strains of martial music were borne on the bracing air to the eager ears of those interested in the festivities of Thanksgiving Day. Immediately after sunrise, the members of the Tabby organizations, dressed in gorgeous array, wending their way, and and blue shirts, as the choice, paraded the streets with colors flying, music playing and negro target bearers following in all the pomp and pride of their office. Yesterday too took its course mainly to close upon shoulder arms, the faithful rifles and much side by side to a more harmless fusilade than many years ago. Some of the companies looked very well—all evidently felt well. All day long, as where put would, you were sure to drop in with some procession or other. Fantastical displays were numerous, and the grotesque attires of most of the tabbies were really calculated to produce uncharitably diaphragmatic disturbance among the spectators. There was a quiet and order in the ranks of the companies returning home in the evening not often witnessed on such occasions.

STUYSER RIFLE SOCIETY.

This Society, Mr. SIMON CHARLES KEYES President, celebrated the day by target shooting and a concert in the afternoon, and a banquet and ball in the evening at the Lion Park, Eighth-avenue and One-hundred-and-twenty-second-street. The Society and their friends assembled numerously, and also a goodly number of ladies were present. The festival was a pleasant one throughout. The Society intends to embellish the grave of the late General Stuyser, of revolutionary memory, in the cemetery of Steubenville, Oneida County, this State, by erecting a suitable monument. The proceeds of yesterday's festival will be contributed to the fund appropriated by the Legislature for the purpose some years ago, and entrusted to the care of Ex-Governor SEYMOUR.

THE SERMONS OF THE DAY.

Abstracts of Discourses in the Leading Churches of Various Denominations—Reasons for Thanksgiving.

Below will be found abstracts of sermons preached yesterday by some of the most eminent divines in this City and vicinity. Discourses were delivered in nearly all the churches appropriate to the occasion. Space would fail us were we to undertake to give them all. We have selected those that treat of topics of the greatest general interest.

Discourse of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher at Plymouth Church.

"And He shall send His angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together His elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other."—Matthew, xxiv., 31.

The fonds of the tribes of Israel, the speaker said, caused their ultimate destruction. In like manner Greece was internally weakened. The world and the race stand to American thought, as Israel stood to the thought of the Jew. We have here the gathering together of the outcasts of all nations. As the Nile in its annual rise brings down some of the formation of all the upper land, so upon these United States comes the annual deposit from the emigrations of the world. It falls on the banks, but who knows what a number of years it will take, the mass, it will become our richest soil. The troublesome question for us is: Can the nation survive the malaria until the soil becomes fertile? The immigrants come among us with their old country divisions and quarrels, religious and social. Foremost stands the great Catholic Church, which is superstitious and imposing former; then comes the Lutheran, and following these religious divisions in the order of social custom. We see the Puritan social and religious customs almost overwhelmed with foreign habits of a different cast. Even our Lord's Day we see given up to festivity and song, and many are prone to think that the end of the world is at hand. But not yet; that is a long way off. In Europe, standing over the safety valves of conservatism and despotism, in this country universal liberty dispenses with the necessity of instruments to quiet the masses. Our Lord's Day was given up to festivity and song, and many are prone to think that the end of the world is at hand. But not yet; that is a long way off. In Europe, standing over the safety valves of conservatism and despotism, in this country universal liberty dispenses with the necessity of instruments to quiet the masses. In Europe, the Church of Christ, in its best, is set to a higher tone than that of the Greek man. This causes a clashing of sounds. Seventy-fold insurrection adds to the brain power, the industry, the activity and the wealth of the land. Our Lord's Day is given up to what we think the best for mankind if they are let out of it, not, they are worse than Israelites provided by primitive force. The great centers of this country is liable to involve conditions into one that break out in open antagonism. The fact that our late rebellion has been crushed ought not to beguile us to profane security. Now have we been in a position to be so secure, we have moved to rest in the belief that the Union is secured forever. Even if we are prevented from rupture by the pressure of state, yet we may not suppose we are prevented from corruption of the antagonism of interest should threaten separation. We should bear in mind that a nation must be so well knit together, except by making it for the interest of all to keep it together. Rhode Island or New-Jersey might not be able to break away, but the great Pacific slope or the great Southwest move on a different scale. It was as a matter of that military power was useful in the late conflict. But however moral power will rule. For his own part, Mr. Beecher said he should not regard a separation of our country into three or four Republics. It is should, in the future, be decisible, with the elements with which it looked upon the Southern rebellion in behalf of human slavery, provided those different Republics moved together in harmony, each bent on achieving the higher ends of liberty and good government. The perpetuity of our Union must be maintained, if at all, by the common consent of the people, founded on common interests. If reason of reason should be the question the question as much the great was the responsibility resting upon our statesmen and the good and moral men of all nations. Americans are the inheritors of the best and most ennobling knowledge and culture of the highest class. His general intelligence is of more value to us as a people, as government, than wealth. The intelligence is to be cultivated in this country in a great measure by the freedom of religious discussion. It is not a fact that the Protestants and Catholics are radically and fundamentally antagonistic. The subversion of religious thought and discussion is as contrary to the order of men expected to do all the thinking for the masses, is what will be attached to by the Catholic Church. Protestantism had sinned in the direction of conformity, or some other of the numerous dogmas of the Church, he would have been forgiven; but to deny liberty, conscience and a right to do his thinking for him was a treason that could never be forgiven by the Catholic Church. Protestantism has a great many bad things to answer for, which, like clams, have opened their mouths and swallowed the food that was borne to them by the waves, but they never opened once still. The Church will find in this country that Protestants are not conscious bond servants, they are permitted to do their own thinking, and they will not be coerced into the ceremonies of the Church, and may fall into the ranks as nominal believers, but when it comes to the application of reason and thought it will never go down—or rather the authority that attempts it will go down. Still all these differences made and the distinctions that resulted from them, were far better for the spread of intelligence than would be dullness and apathy of entire unity in religious belief. The next great cause of national unity and the diffusion of intelligence is the common school system of the country. Brain will always rule the world; it is God's decree that it should be so. What man needs to do is to see to it that all have an equal chance for its cultivation. This is why democracy. Our common schools, also where the inequalities among children. In the little gymnasium, as he called the common schools, the children of all classes and conditions meet and the poor are obliged to mingle together, and the intercourse is beneficial to both. The law is a truly democratic, life is "liberty to grow, but equality at the start;" and this is just the motto of our common school system. It says to the youth of the country, "Stand up, you little Four feet on a level; raise your heads as high as you can." Hence our common schools ought to be good schools. No academy or high school in the land ought to be better than the common school. The nation cannot afford economy in this matter. Those purse-proud and aristocratic men among us, of whom there are unfortunately many who object to the taxes they must pay to the common schools, should be compelled to send them there—not by law, but because they cannot find any other schools as good. [Applause.] He would be willing even to exclude the reading the Bible in our schools if by that means it would be one of our people would be better satisfied, and more zealous in supporting the system. And certainly he, the son of a Puritan and a Puritan himself, could not be suspected of depreciating the importance of Bible reading. The Puritans took their stand on religious toleration; let them stick to their text, and always shadow the principle of perfect free religious toleration, not suffer others to impose. A different principle upon them. What, says the Catholic, "Do you think it proper to encourage infidelity—to bring up children without religious instruction?" Not at all. We do not bring up infidelity in our common schools, but it finds not; therefore, follow that we wish to make no children. Everything in its place. Let the Church teach doctrine. Let the common school give intelligence. Let religious instruction be taught in the household; in the Sunday school, in the Church. Therefore, by all means, let our people guard and cherish the common school of the country. Taxes for their support are the wisest expenditure a State can make, and they should be liberally imposed and cheerfully paid. Mr. Beecher next spoke of Christianity as the agencies in the preservation of our Union, and of the numerous forms of money, good fellowship and Christian brotherhood among all the people throughout our country. The perfect harmony of religion belonged to the future. At present the spirit of sectarianism was too exhibited and the spirit was aggressive, dictatorial, uncharitable and intolerant. Just as strongly the Roman Catholics as any Protestants. The boasted unity of the Catholic Church was the unity of a tenement house with twenty families all quarreling among themselves. Turn these families out of doors and let them do their quarreling in public and they have Protestantism. He did not say this to the prejudice of the Catholics but rather to their credit. The age of unity and harmony had not yet come. At present vitality, good with agitation and discussion. Therefore in the preservation of the Union of the States we ought to expect much old fuel religion but very little fresh. The church, at last at last it pleases God to give us a religion of a religious temper and spirit that shall lead us to love one another, and to try to do good to one another, our nation will be held together by bands clasped and riveted in Heaven and which nothing can break asunder.

Discourse of Rev. Dr. Adams, of the Madison-Square Presbyterian Church.

"Both young men and maidens, old men and children, let them praise the name of the Lord."—Psalm cxlviii., 12, 13.

The verses I have chosen from this ode suggest a theme. The author of this sublime ode descends from sublime heights to rest on the familiar sounds of old men and children, young men and maidens. No reference is here made to difference of condition. Distinctions relate only to age and sex. MASON says that old men who have been recreated by the company of the young have attained a wonderful longevity. Such were the sophists. To-day, in many homes, there will be gatherings of many of different generations. Let us dwell on what God has done for the different conditions of life. Young children have no anxiety for the morrow. Their life is like the Spring, and they live in it with no care. This period is distinguished by life and buoyancy. A happy childhood is a bright candle giving light to all in the house. Yet they have their sorrows, fears and wrongs. Childhood is like Spring. As a next step we take manhood and maidens. The peculiarity of this period of life is the idea of love and the beautiful affections dependent upon it. To-day we should be thankful, as one of our most fervent sources of happiness, for the young maiden who appreciates the beauty of her position—and now we approach the zone of Winter and Autumn. Our old men are not left out of the young in common praise to God. We may find rich mines of enjoyment in old age. Our Winter is preceded by an Indian Summer. Analogous to this is the coming on of age. We do not drop into it perpendicularly. To quietly pleasures of old age, we have said, is a reverence for the Sabbath and worship. When the circle of life is complete, and old age and infancy meet, then we have mellowness and sweetness and tenderness. What is called garrulousness in the old is God's provision for their happiness. The old man's thoughts are with the blessed past and the immortal future. Behold the new shoots springing up by the side of the decayed trunk in this day of family gatherings. Old age is made strong by hope. To the old man surrounded by those who respect, reverence and love, his heaven commences ere the world departs.

Discourse of Rev. John Hall, at the Fifth-Avenue and Nineteenth-Street Presbyterian Church.

"Sing unto God, sing praises to His name: magnify Him that rideth upon the heavens by His name Jah, and rejoice before Him."—Psalm lxviii., 4.

Some people assume an attitude of praise without having all the feeling of true thankfulness, but it is hoped and believed that there are multitudes who have a sincere desire to show gratitude, and who feel how difficult it is to give it fitting expression. PLATO, an ancient philosopher, thanked the Lord only for three things, two of which were that he was a man and not a beast, and that he was a philosopher, and not an common man. The blessings for which he gave thanks were poor in comparison with the blessings which we have received, and who in the present day should commence with his own good fortune? Let each person commence with his own good fortune; let each progress he has made during the year past; let each movement in divine love; very good cause for Godfather he has done for us at the beginning of the year, and it may progress more easily during the twelve months. The Spirit strengthens all, His loving kindness is abundant, and his name should consequently be praised. Happiness may be compared to a beautiful mosaic, composed of one thousand little pieces. Happiness is not a whole, but each this happiness is found in a dwelling where love reigned, friendship exists, the little children play, and all such elements prevailed. Has the past year? True it may not have increased in numbers, but it is to be hoped that there are many who have received an additional spiritual adversary. Taking a view of every, we have cause for thanksgiving. Look at the year, as we have any preceding year; for no later than Friday last a scientific lecture was enacted at Pittsburg, where the Old School General Assembly and the New School met together, each body listing one side of the street, and the Moderators of each finally clasping hands as a sign of their future unity. The people showed, on that occasion, how deep was their sympathy, and we trust that forever more both bodies will remain one. God has given us this great self-governed country a great, free, self-governed Church as an instrument for the performance of His work; and like the little shrimps which are at first separately confined in little pools beside the sea shore, but are afterwards, by the influx of the tide, united and allowed a wider home, so were the Christian Churches in this country, untrammeled, become united together as they came in this City in the year 1869.

Discourse of Rev. Dr. Ewer, at Christ Church.

Commenting upon the exclusion of the Bible from the public schools in Cincinnati, the preacher dwelt upon the aspects of the contest just begun with regard to the Bible in the schools. The Catholic churchman, he said, should seriously ask himself whether religious belief is from Heaven or of man. And if it is from Heaven, then let him ask who gave the State authority to teach it—to teach it in any way, subtly through hymns and school books, or by means of one-sided selections from the Bible. Again the churchman holds that the Bible is the rule of faith to the Church, and not to the individual. And it is a serious question whether this reading of the Bible, without note or explanation, does not focus "inconsiderately in the minds of the rising generation that spirit of individual interpretation of Scripture which strikes at the very foundation of churchmanship, school, of Christianity. Here then is a disease. Church and State are, after all, not entirely disunited in America. Are matters to go on thus? Protestants say "Stop! Very well; suppose then that by and by Rome should gain that ascendency in the councils of the State which Protestantism has had—a thing not beyond the realm of possibility—and suppose that she should turn the tables and teach her doctrines as Protestantism teaches hers? Suppose, even if we insist that the State shall keep its hands entirely off of religion, we have not solved the difficulty. For when you have eliminated all religious exercises from the public schools, it becomes a serious question whether they will not become more distinctly and decidedly, and this the Church can never allow. So we see that this vexed question is by no means settled. But let us thank God that a step so advanced have been reached in Cincinnati, and that we now know and can fairly meet the disease. Yesterday another significant event took place. Kings, queens and princes of nineteen assembled to celebrate the anniversary of the Mediterranean with the Indian Ocean. This is another step toward the establishment of universal peace by binding men together as one nation, and lifting all into a higher civilization. It will tend to harmonize Eastern idea and imagination with Western practicality; the result of which none can forecast. God is evidently doing mightier things than we know of. Let us thank Him for known and unknown blessings. But another event of deeper interest has occurred during the past year. That noble man, Pius IX., has opened the door of Rome and shown us the great extent of that trouble. He has shown that the gigantic dogma of the Papal supremacy has been in great part built on the forged Decretals, as they are called. Rome has not answered this, and she cannot; but she can excommunicate FRONLEIN and she has done it. It behooves all who are looking to Rome for peace to consider whether or not they are willing to submit to this tyranny, which must, if carried to its full logical conclusion, end in the utter crushing out of reason, which was made by God to be free within certain limits.

Discourse of Rev. J. P. Thompson at the Broadway Tabernacle.

"And of Joseph he said, Blessed of the Lord be his land, for the precious things of Heaven, for the dew, and for the deep that coucheth beneath, And for the precious fruits brought forth by the sun, and for the precious things put forth by the moon, and for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills, And for the precious things of the earth and fulness thereof, and for the good will of him that dwelt in the bush: let the blessing come upon the head of Joseph, and upon the top of the head of him that was separated from his brethren. His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the horns of the unicorn: with them he shall push the people to the ends of the earth: and they are the ten thousands of Ephraim, and they are the thousands of Manasseh."—Deuteronomy, xxxiii., 13-17.

The blessings Moses invoked before his death appeared themselves chiefly upon Joseph and his children. They were of a material nature—fruitful land, social prosperity and the hidden treasures of the earth, all, in short, that could be wrought by industry and skill, stood connected with them. Peace and plenty are ever the tokens of God's blessing, and furnish the theme of thanksgiving to our Heavenly Father by a people devoted to Him on this account. Today, set apart for the purpose of national thanksgiving, sees us the prominently favored among the nations of the earth. Peace reigns throughout our land, and every form of industry invites our people to its pursuit; yet are they so proportioned as to meet opportunity equally in any other country. The results morally and personally are the elevating tone given to our minds and civil and religious liberty. Here all men possess absolute equality before the law, and as President GRANT expresses it, "civil and religious liberty is secured to every inhabitant of the land, whose soil is trod by none but freemen." Let us guard jealously against oppression those privileges handed down by our fathers. Let us see to it that religious liberty is maintained, although, as some will say, it will permit the Chinaman to pursue the worship of the Devil. This and other incidental wrongs, God in His own good time will remedy. The elevation of the poor should be our special care, and in a patriotic spirit we should allow our dealings with them in the matter of wages to be ruled by the spirit of economy only so far as it will not tend to deprive them of the means to improve their condition, morally and socially. Let them be taught to help themselves by paying as little as possible for services rendered them, yet they may injure the country at large by depriving the masses of proper remuneration for their labor. Moral force, too, must be backed by physical strength. With the two combined we, as a nation, shall push freedom and liberal notions to the ends of the earth. We should cherish feelings of devout consecration of our country to God in view of the blessings He has bestowed upon us; for be it remembered, we hold them all in trust to be used in the ennobling of mankind.

Discourse of Rev. T. T. Hendricks, at the Church of the Pilgrims.

"Be Thankful."—Psalm c., 4.

The wisdom and value of the injunction contained in this text cannot be overestimated. There were many palpable reasons why the men of to-day should be thankful. Their circumstances demand it. Contrast our condition with the condition of the Pilgrim Fathers when the latter celebrated their first Thanksgiving Day. Surrounded by hostile tribes, wild beasts, with insufficient means and shelter, they rendered thanks with grateful hearts. To-day will be observed the luxury of style such as remarks in olden times never dreamed of. This beautiful land, so lately a seeming wilderness, now receives the richest fabrics, manufactures and jewels of all the nations of the earth, and is advancing with rapid and remarkable bounding. When thanking God for the luxuries enjoyed we must not forget the Holy Bible, that priceless treasure so ignorantly excluded from the masses in some countries. A spirit of grumbling and discontent utterly unbecomes a Christian. Trials and suffering should not be forgotten, even and preserved the memory has some sanguinated Christmas. A Christian should always cultivate and enjoy an abiding spirit of joy and thanksgiving.

Discourse of Rev. Dr. Schenck, St. Ann's Church, Brooklyn Heights.

"The Lord reigneth; let the Earth rejoice."—Psalm xcvii. 1.

Notwithstanding the machinations of princes and men the Lord's reign upon the earth was unmistakably manifested in manifold ways during the past year, and from all this had been observed there was most abundant reason to give thanks to God and for rejoicing. The eloquent preacher discussed briefly the philosophy of the institution of Thanksgiving Day, setting forth how well it was adapted to bring the minds of men generally, and of Christians especially, to reflect upon God's great mercies to them and their dependence upon Divine Power. Such days were not numerous enough in this society, and men were carried on in the continual and impetuous current of commercial excitement, having but few opportunities provided by general consent to sit down for calm reflection. The gold panic, which had attracted the attention of the type-bearing humanity, was a fitting illustration to us as a nation, as it had proved that amid the storm of commercial convulsion and the coining devisings of wary men, the Government was too practical and too strong an institution to give way; and in this there was cause for thanksgiving and joy. The past year had revealed the gratifying truth that we had the best crops that had been harvested since before the war. At no time in the last ten years had there been such successful crops of wheat and cotton as in the season of 1869. We had enjoyed the longest half years of uninterrupted peace, a blessing for which we could not but express in thanksgiving—a blessing which was surely great cause for joy. Nor had any pestilence or contagion been propagated or nourished on these shores. Then, also we enjoyed a rich inheritance of civil liberty, fraught with all the blessings enjoyed in a civilized country, and of manhood, a healthful and moral atmosphere. This boon was to us priceless, and as we valued it for ourselves, we should be ready to transmit it unimpaired and greatly strengthened and beautified to our posterity. The blessings appertaining to religious liberty were the apparent to all Christian people than any other. We should readily accord to every mind, and must elicit from every heart the chief response, "The Lord reigneth, let the earth rejoice." In the course of the year events had transpired in other lands richly calculated to cause men to lift up their voices in joy and praise for the wonderful progress that had been made in the cause and march of the movements in favor of the extension of religious liberty. Especially had they of St. Ann's Parish cause for thanksgiving and joy for the Lord's reign over them. Their affairs had been greatly prospered, and the Lord's hand was very evident at every step, therefore let their joy and rejoice in peace and thanks to Him whose hand had led them on.

Discourse of Rev. Dr. Vinover, at the Synagogue Beneit Jeshurun, Thirty-fourth-Street.

THE UNIVERSE; OR, THE INFINITELY GREAT AND THE INFINITELY LITTLE. By F. A. POUCHET, M. D., &c., &c. Translated from the French. New-York: CHARLES SCRIBNER & Co. 1870.

The taste for popularizing science, of which the French have sent us of late some curious products, finds in this sumptuous volume its latest and one of its most attractive illustrations. Dr. POUCHET tells us at the outset of his book that his sole object in writing it is to inspire and extend a taste for natural science. It would, he admits, require the learning of a HUMBOLDT and the pen of a MICHELET to execute in a perfect manner the task he has essayed. As, however, these are unlikely to be combined, he undertakes to do his best, and wishes with all his heart that others may do better. This shows a promising spirit, and although we subsequently find that the work is of an elementary character, and that, moreover, it was written "on the magnificent beach of Trepont as a relaxation during a vacation," we do not think the author has any reason to be ashamed of his labors, or to regret what he seems to think it necessary to explain, that his name appears on the title page. Dr. POUCHET's sub-title is suggested by BOURNET. "Our imagination," said that natural historian, "is equally confounded by what is infinitely great or infinitely small." Hence the book ranges from mole hills to mountains, from microscopic animalcules to megatheria. The range of subjects is too vast for scientific treatment in any minute sense, but it is impossible to deny that numbers may be induced, from the fascination of the style and the attractiveness of its setting, to make a bowing acquaintance with many things to which they might otherwise remain total strangers. Beginning with "The Invisible World," the writer passes to "The Architects of the Sea," "Insects," "Ravagers of Forests," "Protectors of Agriculture," "The Architecture of Birds" and "The Migration of Animals," which ends the First Part. All this refers to the animal kingdom. The Second Part enters that of the vegetables, and treats of "The Anatomy of Plants," their physiology, "The Seed and Germination," "Extremes in the Vegetable Kingdom" and "Migrations of Plants." The succeeding part deals with geology under the heads "Formation of the Globe," "Fossils," "The Mountains—Cataclysms and Upheavals of the Globe," "Volcanoes and Earthquakes," "Glaciers and Eternal Snows," "Caverns and Grottoes," "Steppes and Deserts" and "The Air and its Corpuscles." Why the last-named topic is placed under "Geology" is not at first sight clear, but the following extract indicates its curious and interesting character:

"The flour of wheat which constitutes the basis of our food, and is used everywhere, is disseminated everywhere by the air. By means of this fluid it penetrates into the most secret recesses of dwellings and monuments. I have discovered it in the most inaccessible nooks of our old Gothic churches, mixed with dust blackened by the antiquity of six or eight centuries; I also found some in the palaces and crypts in the Tuileries, where it perhaps dated from the epoch of the Fronde."

In our cities it is one of the most abundant corpuscles in the air, the falling snow and the wheeling insect take up an enormous amount as they traverse it. I have counted as many as forty or fifty grains on the wings of certain flies. It also attaches itself to the surface of the body of men and large animals.

We also discover in the air the existence of different infusoria, and what is still more extraordinary, we even find these animacules perfectly alive. We also frequently meet with the debris of insects, filaments of wool, silk or cotton, tinted with the most various colors; likewise the resinous refuse of the soot, the particles of smoke expelled from our manufactories and household fires. Everything is found here, and with a little practice can readily be recognized; and the only thing we do not encounter, or what is at any rate prodigiously rare, is the germs and seeds with which the pamphlets burden it."

This illustrates "the infinitely little." "The infinitely great" is exemplified in the succeeding part. "The Sidereal Universe," which, under the captions of "The Stars" and "Immensity" and "The Solar World," passes in general review what is known and what the author surmises of the heavenly bodies. The final section of the book is called "Monsters and Superstitions," and discusses the various monsters and appearances in which men have believed and of which they have preserved records. M. POUCHET clearly suppose the dragon to be mythical. He is evidently not aware that the remains of such a creature have been found in England, and that its former existence has lately been placed beyond doubt. An account of these remains was recently given in the Academy, and this and other discoveries suggest about the important, if not very original, reflection, that other and perhaps most stories of creatures and events, subsequently thought incredible, may have had, like the dragon, an original basis of fact.

Taken altogether, The Universe, with its extensive range of topics, its 800 for the most part admirable plates and engravings, its clever blending of the wonderful and the commonplace, of amusement with instruction, is so far unsurpassed in its way as a gift book or as an almost exhaustless magazine of reference and discussion for the family centre table. Very few volumes, we fancy, will be more looked at or talked over during the coming long Winter evenings.

THE PARKS, PROMENADES AND GARDENS OF PARIS: Described and Pictured in Extension to the Works of our own Cities and of Public and Private Gardens. By W. ROBINSON, F. S. A. London: JOHN MURRAY. New-York: SCRIBNER, WELFORD & Co.

We have here a book which, to those attracted to its subjects at all, will prove of supreme interest. The illustrated description it gives of the Champs Elysees, the Gardens of the Louvre and the Tuileries, the Bois de Boulogne and the Bois de Vincennes, the Parc Monceau and the Parc des Buttes Chaumont, the Jardin des Plantes, and the Gardens of the Luxembourg, the Parisian squares and boulevards and the grounds of Versailles, St. Cloud and Fontainebleau, do not constitute the sole, or even the chief merits of the volume. These accounts are trustworthy and alluring; but similar ones, at least in the former respect, are to be found in a score of guide books; so that they do not come upon us with aught of the charm of novelty. But when we come to fruit and flower culture, to that of mushrooms and salads and small choice vegetables, we feel that, if not on a stage altogether new, we are surrounded by entirely novel scenery and decorations, and that there is a great deal to learn from these pages of serious practical importance. Dismissing the subject of ornamental gardening, and of the architecture of public parks and squares—subjects treated in these pages in a well-informed and picturesque, but we conceive, in no unique style—let us pass for a moment to the question of fruits, mushrooms and small vegetables. The book, we may remark, was written for London, but in most respects its teachings are as available for New-York. All these edibles, especially salads, mushrooms, &c., are far too dear in New-York. In a restaurant the fact that a dish is au champignons adds fifty per cent. to the price just as au truffes adds a hundred. But the mushrooms can be procured at little cost to an indefinite extent, whereas the truffles are rare, doubtful and occult and so will always command a high price. As regards vegetables, too, what can be more absurd, than the price charged for them at nearly every tolerable eating house. It is not so in Paris, as those who read this book will easily perceive. The art of producing these grateful and wholesome additions to the table is there cultivated with the greatest industry and nicety, and the supplies are not only of the best in quality, but practically without limit in quantity. Why should it not be so with our cities? It certainly might be with great profit and sanitary advantage. Let all who have the requisite space, convenience of access, and taste to set up a market garden near an American great city, read Mr. ROBINSON's book and learn how to amass riches for themselves while doing good for others. This, to be sure, is not the only reform or improvement connected with the food supplies of our swelling towns that demands speedy and adequate attention. It is however, a very good one to begin with, and has this exceptional characteristic that it can be instituted at immeasurable points with little expense, and so requires neither capitalists nor political influence to set it going.

A WINTER IN FLORIDA. By LEONARD BELL. New-York: WOOD & HOLBROOK. 1869.

Within a few years such interest has been awakened, and such active inquiry set on foot concerning the resources of Florida, and the advantages she presents to settlers, as to render all information on the subject desirable. Those who have hitherto written about this State, claim that the soil is so productive that, with slight efforts of industry, it may be made to yield all that human beings require; that the climate is mild and genial, at times rather hot, but never subject to sudden and severe alternations of heat and cold. Mr. LEONARD BELL, the latest authority, confirms the opinions of his predecessors. His work gives a clear historical narrative of Florida from the period when SEBASTIAN CABOT coasted along her shores, and PONCE DE LEON fitted out two vessels and sought the fountain of health in the land to which he gave the name it has ever since borne. Mr. BELL furnishes a brief sketch of the scenes of turbulence and bloodshed to which the early settlers were exposed—the atrocious entrance of MENENDEZ and the retaliation of DE GOURGAS; of all the vicissitudes, in short, of the litigated territory in the times when, as an old writer remarks, "she was coveted by the English, wooed by the Spanish and almost won by the French,"—and so through many trials—until her admission to the United States in 1845. To those who mean to visit Florida this volume will be valuable, and to them, as well as to others, it may be useful to know that—

"The capabilities of the State, in an agricultural point of view, are unbounded. The growth of cotton, coffee and cane, as also indigo, and not improbably, together with the production of wine, is likely to form a prominent feature in her future history; but the things above all others in which Florida is certainly destined to excel her sister States is in early fruit-growing and marketing. The climate is favorable for most of the tropical fruits, as also for those grown in more Northern latitudes."

The present social condition and spirit of the Floridian people is apparently faithfully described by Mr. BELL, as well as their necessities and future prospects.

THE SCRIPTURAL DOCTRINE OF HADES: Comprising an Inquiry into the State of the Dead Generally and Which Dwell between Death and the Resurrection; and Those Passages Treating from the Bible with Which Are Connected the Words Sheol, Hades and Gehenna. By Rev. GERMAN HASKIL, D. D. Philadelphia: J. B. LIPPINCOTT & Co.

The question of an intermediate state has occupied the thoughts of many of the profoundest philosophers and theologians, and widely differing views have been announced and defended by different branches of the Christian Church. Any work, therefore, which deals sincerely and intelligently with this subject, is likely to be an acceptable contribution to current theological literature. The book before us is not remarkable for its display of learning, but the author handles his subject with ability. After admitting that death is the destined portion of all men, he proceeds to state various opinions respecting the consequences of death, accompanying this statement with arguments against the views that death is the extinction of man, that it is the termination of man's existence, that it is a state of sleep or insensibility, that it is an entrance into Purgatory, or into the final Heaven or Hell believed in by most Protestants. In the course of this discussion, the question of the atonement of Christ is considered at length; the author's opinion is that this atonement was completed, not upon the cross but by Christ's descent into Hades, and continuing under the power of death for a time; thus he bore the curse of sin, which was death, and made expiation for mankind.

There are, according to Mr. BARTLE, three states for both good and bad; for the former this world where faith is their leading characteristic, Hades distinguished by hope, Heaven marked by love; for the latter this world where the leading feature is unbelief, Hades characterized by despair and Hell by hatred. Such a view necessitates compartments in Hades, and for these the author finds warrant in the Scripture passage which represents Dives and Lazarus as separated by a gulf, and many other passages both of the Old and New Testaments.

THE MYSTERIES OF THE OCEAN. From the French of ARTHUR MAHON. London and New-York. T. NELSON & SONS. 1869.

THE DESERT WORLD. From the French of ARTHUR MAHON. London and New-York. T. NELSON & SONS. 1869.

The obvious intention of the author in the production of these interesting works, is to render physical and natural science popularly intelligible and attractive. He has toiled through those severe studies which are requisite to a knowledge of the mechanism, structure and inorganic constituents of the earth, he has made deep researches in the economy of nature, examining her noblest objects and phenomena, the changes that have occurred, and the destroying and renovating powers, and has classified—as far as he has power to do so—all animated nature from man to the worm. The first volume named is divided into four books, and commences with the birth of the ocean, giving vivid pictures of the vast expanse of waters on which the sun shone and the rain descended, at a time almost too remote for human imagination to realize.

The speculations of LEIBNITZ, BUFFON, LA PLACE and Sir HUMPHREY DAVY are briefly stated, and in some instances brought to support those of the author; and the facts produced in evidence of the transformations of sea and land, the birth of continents and their subsidences, afford material for theorizing on the order of time in which forms of life were introduced on the globe. We next come to the phenomena of the ocean, its circulation, atmosphere and tides, its tempests and water spouts, of which striking descriptions are given. Strange stories of ocean monsters, wherein tradition, facts and fiction are curiously blended, and the collected evidence regarding the gigantic polypi and the sea serpent occupy several pages, which are followed by chapters on whales, sharks, seals and sea birds. The uses of the ocean, which affords an inexhaustible mine of wealth, as well as an ever-ripe harvest, next receive consideration, and the book closes with a sad chapter of disasters at sea, and an appalling record of the human tribute man pays to the devouring billows.

The Desert World treats of subjects which open to the student of nature a field of contemplation filled with interest. Not only are the great deserts of Africa and Asia described; the author includes all regions which have not [illegible] to cultivate [illegible] the community [illegible] "The Morals" and "Manners of Journalism," and Mr. ANTHONY TROLLOPE's second installment of "An Editor's Tales," which he styles "Josephine de Montmorency." Mr. WEMYSS's article is true, we should say, nearly every word of it, but it was intended and can hardly fail to be good to those for whom the facts or its theories are narrated for the first time; but to others it may seem a little trite and its inaccuracies to go, as a Frenchman would describe it, without saying. There are good journals and bad journals, and those that sell their influence to be who runs may see. This is but the first section of Mr. WEMYSS's essay, and, being written on the side of good morals and sound patriotism, as his productions always are, we trust the remainder may more than carry out the promise and effectiveness of the beginning. Mr. TROLLOPE's story is very amusing. It is open to the objection of telling the secrets of the prison house, an objection that some think serious. We do not believe the editors of our own magazines go on expeditions of discovery in search of correspondents supposed to be young and pretty. However, Mr. TROLLOPE is some time past the staid and cautious period of youth, and is to be indulged when he likes in a little frisksome. The Gallery is in other respects a good average number.

English Universities.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Your correspondent "Carl Benson," in a letter which is courteous and temperate, as well as interesting, accuses me of having either "exaggerated or generalized too hastily," in some passages of my article in the November (Galaxy, on "The English Universities." You, in an editorial note, attributed to me "a very singular mistake," and you represent me as having said that "no man from the poorer classes had anything to do with either of the two great universities supposed to be national." Apparently you have not read either my article or Mr. BENSON's letter. Either would have shown you that I did not say what you represent me to have said.

Mr. BENSON quotes my words correctly: "When the system had reached its height, say any time before the last twenty and within the last fifty years, it might be said with almost literal truth that no Dissenter, no Roman Catholic and no man of the poorer classes had anything to do with either of the two great universities which were supposed to be national." Mr. BENSON, complaining of this as exaggeration or hasty generalization, can only show that the sons of very poor men actually have made a way for themselves and obtained education at Oxford or Cambridge. Of course this is true. The son of a washerwoman is at present a member of the British House of Lords. Several men of very humble birth have risen to be English Poets. Nevertheless a matter might fairly remark that "it might be said with almost literal truth that the men of the poorer classes have nothing to do with the House of Lords." It might be said with almost literal truth that in the English army men do not rise from the ranks; yet I know of a distinguished General officer who began in the ranks. I have seen GRANG, the giant, who is eight feet high, and TOM THUMB, who is about three; yet it might be said with almost literal truth that men are more than three and less than eight feet in height.

I described a system, the general effects of which is to exclude most youths from the Universities. I distinctly stated and showed that it was quite possible for poor youths to get in there, but I condemned the system because of the great difficulties it imposed in their way. Mr. GOLDWIN SMITH, who, I presume, knows more about the matter—aside from his minority of the students get—is a possible that most of them should get—anything like their money's worth? He also says that the practical answer to such a question, would, doubtless, be that the Oxford and Cambridge students are usually "the sons of wealthy parents, that they are not going to make their own bread, that they have nothing better to do."

I am, Sir, faithfully yours,

JUSTIN MCCARTHY.

ST. DENIS HOTEL, Monday, Nov. 15, 1869.

[The words which Mr. JUSTIN MCCARTHY insinuates that we put into his mouth were correctly quoted, although they comprise only a part of the original sentence as it stands in the Galaxy. The limits of space in a newspaper often demand that quotations should be abridged; but no injustice was done to Mr. MCCARTHY by the curtailment in question, for the portions of his sentence which we omitted did not modify or affect the portion actually quoted. It only rendered his general statement stronger, broader, and more innocuous. The idea intended upon the article was that poor men are excluded from a University training in England, and this Mr. BENSON's letter showed to be erroneous. Mr. MCCARTHY apparently says in his article, "It, i. e., a University education, was, of necessity, always beyond the reach of a poor man." This assertion is inaccurate, and if we quoted the whole article it would not correct the inaccuracy. Mr. MCCARTHY "apparently" forgets one week what he wrote the previous week, and takes up a second "gentleman" whom he finds his first cut from under his feet.]

The Routes of Our Ocean Steamships—Table of Distances—The Fastest Steamers.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In the late editions of your valuable newspaper I notice various letters in which the writers claim the honor of the shortest passage across the Atlantic for different steamers, apparently as their sympathies tend, and it appears to me that they pass over the real point at issue, the distances between New-York and Queenstown and New-York and Brest, with no very general a statement that they are not likely to come to any agreement on the point. With your assistance I propose to lay before them and the many others of your readers who take an interest in the subject a calculation of the distances in such a form that they may point out any error [illegible]

one flag. Come forward then and contribute to the glorious and prosperity of Alabama and her sister States. Together with these friends who have come so far to help you. We will prove to the great world that we have a country in a similar state of ruin, in another portion of America, and I am proud to say that they have not asked a single town or country for aid without receiving it. Fifty years from now Alabama, under the influences now set in motion, should be one of the richest States of the Union. Alabama has now a population of fifteen to the square mile, but in another hundred and sixty, yet compare the two—take from the latter her machinery and workshops, and her people could scarcely live. The cotton spun in her factories goes in part from Alabama—the iron to build her machinery is raised beyond her limits. Yet can we wonder at her wealth and prosperity, by her people have brought her. Let every man aid to carry on this mighty work in our section—press forward this great industrial revolution, and I feel it my duty to lend my aid, and I expect to do so. I exhort you, my fellow-citizens, fellow-members of other States, to come forward and follow now where I lead, as surely as you have done on other fields. Forget to-day, burying and forgetting the past. I gladly meet these Northern gentlemen, your friends, who have come to assist in your work. You I accept their offers to develop our section, and shaking hands with them, exhort you to the same energy, to be fellow-and, and contract with prosperity, peace and unity."

It is difficult to measure the good which such meetings draw each a mind, under such circumstances, do, and I think it better proof of a thorough, desirable reconstruction than any more empty political speechmaking.

OTHER FACTS AND FIGURES.

Governor W. H. Smith, of Alabama, spoke of the pride with which he welcomed those from the North, who came not now with cannon and shell and bristling bayonets to kill and destroy, but come in the name of peace, with money and picks and shovels, to build up, develop and restore. Colonel E. Muhlburt, Superintendent of the Western and Atlantic Railroad, (State property,) spoke at length, and presented figures of great interest, that too long to be available in such a communication as this; but I give some of his values interest connected with the future of the Alabama and Chattanooga Railroad.

"It has been authoritatively stated that the line of the proposed railway south from Chattanooga traverses coal fields for 200 miles, and iron ore beds for 100 miles. These are nearly 100 miles wide, which gives a coal area of 20,000 square miles, or three times the total coal area of Great Britain. The coal and iron fields are contiguous to the Alabama and Chattanooga Railway, and fully equal to that above stated. In conclusion, permit me to call attention to another important fact. Growing on these coal and iron fields is the sooty staple so much coveted by other nations, and flourishing between the hills filled with the minerals are the rivers supplying the power to run the machinery, made of these materials, to spin and weave the cotton."

THE WORK OF RECONCILIATION.

With many of the large manufacturing establishments and much of the railroad stock of the South, owned or controlled by capital from the North, the work of reconciliation and restoration has been in great measure successful. The best means of breaking down sectional prejudices and social ostracism is to unite the people of the two sections in great commercial and industrial enterprises which enlist not only their capital, but their pride and sympathy. When you find a community so bound together, the work of lasting peace and good will is almost accomplished. I know of nothing more encouraging in the events of the next few years than in these material efforts of Northern men to aid in building up the South, receiving in return capital in was called out at the banquet of the Alabama and Chattanooga Railroad. ILLINOIS.

The Constitutional Convention—Disgraceful Election—Chicago Finances—Wife Murder Trial—Old Landmarks Gone—A Sanitarium Gone, &c.

From Our Own Correspondent.

CHICAGO, Saturday, Nov. 18, 1865.

We are not fairly out of the woods yet in relation to the Constitutional Convention. The organs of both parties claim a majority in that body; but the fact is, I suppose, that neither has, of the members elected, a straight ticket. In several counties independent Republicans were elected over the regular nominees, and these hold the balance of power. In the adjoining county of Dupage, a county seat quarrel has long raged between the rival villages of Naperville and Wheaton. An immense amount of bad blood has been manifested, and a very large quantity of rascality and fraudulent voting done on the question of location, which has been submitted to the people once or twice. Well, both of these towns must have a candidate for the Constitutional Convention. The first returns, as they came from the report of the inspectors in the various towns, showed the election of the Naperville man, who is a Democrat, by 114 majority; but the Wheatonites, who now have the county seat and the County Clerk, manipulated the returns, and their man is elected by about 800 majority. The Courts are appealed to for justice and redressing, and the processes familiar to you New-Yorkers, to adjust the difficulty. And so, I suppose, our Constitutional Convention will remain in some doubt as to its political completeness until the meeting thereof. I think, however, that the Republicans will be able in some way to muster a majority of from three to five on the organization. The Prohibitionists polled not far from a 400 votes in the five counties where they ran tickets, and succeeded in electing two candidates as a very complete.

The Constitutional Convention will be far from being a strong body. Adams County furnishes the two ablest men, Judge Skinner and Hon. O. H. Browning, late Secretary of the Interior. Cook County sends only one man of any account, Hon. S. S. Hayes, and Mr. Mattox, of the Tribune, is a man of ability. The others would make valuable members of a village council. The Democratic side of the house will be decidedly the strongest in point of ability; but we think that moderate counsels will prevail in both sections.

CHICAGO FINANCES.

The startling exposition of the financial condition of this city during the recent canvass has had its legitimate effect. A sale of city seven per cents' bonds was made a few days since at 60. Our citizens have to pay, therefore, in many ways for the waste and extravagance of its officials. There is no reason why, great as our taxes and our expenses are, Chicago bonds should not be at par. The interest is always paid promptly and the principal provided for at maturity. The politicians, for their own purposes, put the matter in the worst possible light before the public, pending the election; but Chicago will never repudiate or be delinquent. We shall bear our own burdens, great as they may be, and wrongfully and wickedly imposed, as many of them have been.

END OF A WIFE-MURDER TRIAL.

Our neighboring County of Kane has been the scene of much excitement and interest during the past week over the trial of Rev. Isaac B. Smith, a Congregational minister, for the alleged murder of his wife. The fact which gave rise to the charge was the drowning of Mrs. Smith in a creek, with water twenty inches deep, as they were crossing it, by the overturning of the buggy in which they were riding. Mrs. Smith was a feeble woman, and Mr. Smith a feeble, nervous, excitable man. The charge originated from a company in which Mrs. Smith's life was insured, and the fact of this insurance was alleged to constitute the motive. The prosecution failed to prove anything beyond the drowning, while the defence presented testimony to robut every ground of suspicion depended upon by the prosecution to make out a case circumstantially. The verdict of acquittal was, therefore, necessarily rendered. Under all ordinary circumstances, Mrs. Smith ought not to have been drowned. A man of her nerve and presence of mind would have had no difficulty in rescuing her. But Mr. Smith was neither; but is easily prostrated mentally and physically, and rendered incapable of effort by fright and sudden danger.

OLD LANDMARK GONE.

Just as I write, the flames are doing their work of destruction upon the "Old Wigwam," memorable as the place where Lincoln was nominated in 1860. It became, from subsequent events a historic spot, although merchandise invaded it, and made it its own. We can almost hear the mighty voice which went up from the assembled thousands when the result of the balloting was proclaimed. But the fire-fiend has made it a shrine, and the leaping flames are even now turning it to ashes.

VARIOUS MATTERS.

Hon. J. Y. Scammon, with his accustomed liberality, has recently given $10,000 toward building of the indebtedness of Chicago University. I understand that he also proposes to erect a suitable building for the library of the institution, which has recently been destroyed by the purchase, at Berlin, of the valuable Hengstenberg Library of 12,000 volumes—one of the most valuable private collections in Germany. The University is in a prosperous condition, with a large attendance, and everything going along admirably. But, like all other young institutions, it is laboring under the difficulties of an insufficient and of inadequate endowment.

We have at length a Stock Exchange Board, regularly organized and efficient. I suppose the Board of Trade did not afford sufficient scope for the talents of our genteel gamblers, and so they must branch out into this line. It strikes the unsophisticated that this attempt to transplant hells and halls in Chicago is slightly premature, and partakes something of the nature of a forcing process.

The Executive Committee of the Woman's Suffrage organization have appointed a list of delegates to the National Convention which is to be held in Cleveland. It is a "mixed Convention," consisting of men and women. Among the delegation are Judges Bradwell and Waite, Edward Beecher, D. D., and the Livermores, of course.

We have actually had a committee for reason in this city, and a cessation of hanging. We generally let this sort of people off with imprisonment, but the business has so increased upon the hands of the Courts that it probably has been at length thought best to attempt to put a check to it.

Jefferson has been playing "Rip Van Winkle" at McVicker's Theatre during the past week, to crowded houses. In fact there is a perfect furor to see and hear him, and I have no doubt but the play in his hands would have a profitable "run" for six months. He takes hold of the popular mind because no other delineator of the sleepy Dutchman has ever done.

Saloon murders and bloody affrays continue to be of almost daily occurrence. Chicago is acquiring an unenviable reputation in this respect. The divorce business is as brisk as ever. From three to four divorces a day are disposed of during the sitting of the Courts.

Real estate is decidedly dull. The shortest matters tell me that the largest portion of their business relates to the raising money on mortgages. But the decline in prices cannot be sustained in future years, and probably will not be, owing to the greater augmentation of capital here, and yet as boats have gone down decidedly, and as there are more empty stores and dwellings than there have been at any time during the last six years, the market cannot but feel the effect. "Outside" property is decidedly unsalable. Some of our people are forming the idea that there is to be a large commercial center where the Pacific Road crosses the Mississippi.

We have been cheated out of our Indian Summer this Fall. The weather has been very changeable, with frequently light falls of snow, and frost. The first heavy freeze, about two weeks ago, did a large amount of damage to undigested apples and apples. So great was the injury to the former, that prices have gone up in the market from fifty to eighty cents per bushel.

Chicago is full of burglars, who pass unmolested by our Police. The citizens have got into the pernicious habit of compounding felony by paying the price of the return of the articles stolen and no questions asked. They advertise to do this, on being "burgled," and the rascals respond, and pass on to other robberies unmolested. As this is criminal on the part of the sufferer, a stop ought to be put to it. It is more than a misdemeanor for citizens to compound felony in partnership with the burglars. The Commissioners recently appointed seventy-five new men, principally from the slums and saloons of the city—associates of thieves, prostitutes and gamblers—and since then the burglaries have increased in number and impudence.

Business is comparatively dull and money tight at the banks. But the banks have plenty of currency to loan at from 5 to 5 per cent. a month. This makes the banks short at their estimates, where they can only take 10 per cent.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

State Agricultural Fair at Columbia—Stock Cattle—New Productions—Northern Premium—Distinguished Persons—Results Important.

From Our Own Correspondent.

COLUMBIA, Saturday, Nov. 18, 1865.

The sixth annual Fair of the State Agricultural and Mechanical Society has just closed, having been open three days—the 16th, 11th and 18th instants. Five Fairs had been held when the war came upon us, and this is the first one since the war. It has tested in a high degree successful, more so in the attendance and enthusiasm manifested than in the extent of the material on exhibition.

There were exhibited sixty-nine horses, that number including horses, mules and donkeys. These were exhibited under saddle, in harness, in gear, and in hand. Prizes were awarded to thoroughbreds, to light draft, and to South Carolina raised, separately. The number of cattle upon the grounds was forty-two, representing the various grades. There were seven sheep, eight goats, fourteen swine, and about a hundred head of poultry—geese, ducks, chickens, pigeons, turkeys, and guinea fowls.

The other departments of agriculture, manufactures and household affairs were of a scale about equal to that of the stock just mentioned. The stock and mechanical and agricultural implements, which were too large for indoors, were exhibited in the Fair Grounds—a field just north of the city, containing about twenty acres. The buildings, erected for this Fair by the municipal authorities, are amply large, the main building, consisting of an H-shaped transept house, of about eighty feet in length and fifty in width. Herein were a great many articles of household production, such as breads, butter, fruits, preserves and pickles; articles of wear, needlework and garments of various kinds; works of art, photographs, paintings, sculpture and ornamental things generally; and a good variety of useful productions. Among the noteworthy articles, such as indicate new branches of industry, was a bee house, which has been registered for patent in Washington; an electric fan for kerosene lamps; sugar made from the syrup of sorghum, the sugar cane introduced during the war; manufactured honey, an article which the discoverer says he can manufacture at ten cents a pound, while real bee honey commands full twice that price, and the manufacturer can hardly be distinguished from the genuine honey; two plugs of opium from Union County, was pronounced by the committee of physicians who examined it, to be of very superior quality; and an electric burglar alarm, invented and exhibited by a Mr. Mason, of Sumter County, the design of which is to give notice to the occupant of the house, and not alarm the intruder.

One award of merit was given to the Ursuline Convent—a Catholic institute for girls near Columbia—for a specimen of handiwork in the shape of a game piece wrought with feathers. A premium was awarded to Ben. Williams, a negro of such city, for the second best lot of shoes. The negro then was in many respects highly obnoxious to the white race in this State. The carpet-bagger than was not ruled out of the field of competition. STOLBRAND is, I believe, the only white man of his party (Radical) that exhibited anything at all, and the awarding him a prize indicates that the Democrats design either to conciliate or, at least, to avoid discriminations on political grounds. Among the articles exhibited were some many machines of Northern invention and patent, exhibited here by their agents. These were, besides, a large number of articles from adjoining States, some of which received premiums.

The crowd—and that largest that has been assembled here since the war—the only gathering of the white population since 1860. The number of persons in attendance on Wednesday was probably 3,000; on Thursday 4,000, and on Friday 5,000.

The material results of the Fair are important, in that the articles indicate a reasonable progress steady, slow toward the kind of reconstruction. The moral results, however, are far more important, in that there are new sources of wealth suggested, new channels of industry made known, new aims conceived, and new hopes awakened. BOISE.

Canal Propulsion.

Commenting upon the article which we recently published in relation to transportation by railway and canal, the Buffalo Express says:

"Neither the narrowness nor the thinness of the stratum of water in the channel of the Erie Canal offers any insuperable obstacle to the use of propelling wheels, as the experience of those who have recently experimented with steam canal boats and tugs will testify. The failure to introduce steam-towing on the canal has been entirely due to the inadequacy of its locks for the employment of larger and longer boats. But recently we had a conversation with a gentleman who has given more study to, and is more practically conversant with this matter than, perhaps, any other who could be named, and we know that his experience and experiments have fully satisfied him upon that point. Give us enough water to keep a boat afloat, and we may be sure that the ingenuity of our mechanics will find means of propelling it. Give us enough of this propulsion will inevitably follow."

DIVISION OF THE STATE.

The Suggestion to be Addressed by the Result of the Recent Election.

NEW-YORK TIMES, Monday, Nov. 9, 1865.

To the Editors of the Albany Advertiser:

You close a brief notice of an article in the NEW-YORK TIMES, upon the recent election, as follows: "We think the issues of the late contest will convince the Republicans of the State that they have had to pull their full vote to secure hereafter an annual triumph." A life-long Whig and Republican, never having cast a so-called Democratic ticket in my life, I yet think there is strong ground to question the conclusion you have reached. Nothing can be predicated of the recent election. It went by default in New-York City and Brooklyn, as it should, an experience of thirty years enables me to state. Outside of these cities, manufactories, cities, and others, who have a positive interest in a Democratic ticket, the city cannot, except at times of most extraordinary excitement, be induced to attend primary meetings or vote at the polls. This has at times been the case to a great extent, but the difficulty increases from year to year, and those who are thus derelict are for the most part Republicans. They take no interest in politics, and, practically, they cannot, it is well to say, good. They, perhaps, give up their money, intending to reside elsewhere when a convenience is secured, and because politics are too corrupt, they will not have anything to do with them. This, you will see, we will be told, is the fact, the strongest and vicious element governing naturally and inevitably in the pre-called Democratic Party, this being the reason why that party has been the only one that ever had a continuous existence for years, in the country. This is the reason why the Democratic Party so long held the reins of the General and State Governments. The political equipment of the party has declined just in proportion as the people have become intelligent and virtuous. Throughout the whole North, except in a few of our large cities, a marked change in the tide which has taken place in this respect, and hence the reason why New-Hampshire, Connecticut, and Democratic, has ceased to be so wholly. New-York also, the city of New-York and Brooklyn chiefly excepted, has ceased to be Democratic, though formerly decidedly so. New-Jersey is in a transition state. The Republican party, and Pennsylvania, Ohio and the Northwest, and the Pacific, are recovered irreversibly, churches and schools being laid to modern Damascus.

But what of New-York City and Brooklyn? At present we are hopelessly given over to the dominion of the ignorant and vicious classes. We may hope that they may, to a degree, under some circumstances, but so long as the responsibility of the Administration is not felt and acted upon by the better and respectable classes, they will continue to control us. What a spectacle is now presented! Driven to adopt a method of governing special interests by appointing commissions at Albany, we now find ourselves at the mercy of a party pledged to sweep them all away. If we escape riots, such as occurred last Fall, we shall be very fortunate, as well be more than we have a right to expect. Let us temperate no longer. The State is too large and must be territorially divided. New-York and Brooklyn, Staten Island and Long Island, and perhaps Westchester County, must be made of in a State by themselves. This will leave the balance of the State, in the interests, and compel, in view of the position in which we are involved, all the respectable classes in New-York and Brooklyn to combine to control the civil administration. There is no other remedy that can be applied, and this will be certain after a brief season of anarchy, which is quite likely to be the immediate result. Hon. Fernando Wood, Tammany, and others like him, against the Democratic Party if their lives and property were at stake, as must surely, they would be if Somebody else Lager would be chained and kept on.

Much might be said in favor of the division of the State, but it is not a proper time in this connection. Let ambitious politicians in Western New-York make their political future upon this basis, and they will promote their own interest and that of the State to large. E.

The Acquittal of Rev. Isaac B. Smith of the Charge of Wife Murder.

From the Chicago Tribune, Nov. 14.

The verdict of acquittal, rendered yesterday, in the case of Rev. Isaac B. Smith, has been generally expected by those who have watched the testimony, and the manner in which the prosecution has been conducted. The evidence was singularly clear on some points which were not made public before the trial. It appeared, without doubt, that Mr. Smith and his wife had lived happily together, and seemed to manifest towards each other the most affectionate kindness toward each other; that he had urged him to put the insurance on her life, on the ground that in the event of her death he would be almost without the means of giving her a respectable burial; that on the morning of the fatal day Mr. Smith abandoned the intention of going to the Conference at Elgin, and was only induced to do so when he found his wife had all her clothes packed in order to make it the occasion of a visit to Mrs. Frank Smith; that he had slept that night, and when they were about to return from the Conference, Mr. Smith twice urged a brother clergyman to drive to his sister's with them, thus showing that at least up to the hour of the accident Mr. Smith could have had no intent to take the life of his wife at the time and place at which her death occurred.

Mr. Smith's defence identified that the funds necessary for the purchase of the farm he had been long were to have been procured, as soon as practicable, from the sale of his farm, and in the meantime he seems to have relied on temporary aid from one or two members of his congregation. These facts disprove any previous intent, as do very far to disprove any direct motive.

The catastrophe at the river or usual still remains, in some respects, a mystery. The depth of the water, owing to rains just previous, is indeed, increased by a portion of the testimony from the alleged seventeen inches to about twenty-four inches. But the testimony of Mr. Smith to bring out, at least to hand, the body of his wife, or even to find her in the river, and his state of intense bodily and mental exhaustion when he arrived at her brother's house, are not explained. It is to be regretted that the jury allowed the peculiar trying position in the character of Mr. Smith, as shown by the evidence, to rule out all testimony relative to Mr. Smith's own physical condition and peculiarities as inadmissible, unless the defence would plead insanity, which, of course, they did not. It would then have been an entire branch of the case had the defence proven, as they offered to do, that Mr. Smith was a weak, nervous man, whom the sudden fright of being thrown into the water, and a few minutes wading round to search for his wife, or perhaps the consciousness that she was drowned, would have reduced him to such a condition of prostration and helplessness as that in which he was found. The jury, however, with Mr. Smith before them, could not fail to judge accurately of his mental condition, with or without other testimony. Whatever it is very remarkable, it is not impossible that the accused should be prostrated by the sudden danger and exposure, that, even to two feet of water, just after dark, he would be too helpless to do more than drag himself to land. People thoroughly agitated and disturbed, do not always know their own strength. Whatever the belief of the jury may have been, the verdict need express no more than that the charge was not proven. In this the public will generally concur.

Women in the Clinical Schools—The Recent Scene in the Pennsylvania Hospital.

A committee of the Faculty of the Women's Medical College of Pennsylvania, have just submitted a report in which they define the position of the women medical students of that city, in view of the discussions brought about by the recent scene in the Pennsylvania Hospital, where a number of women present at a clinical demonstration were insulted by the male students in attendance. In their report the Committee say:

"The latter have lately been very frequently thrown out, that ladies have not attended the great clinical schools of the country, nor listened to its celebrated teachers, and consequently, they cannot be as well prepared as men for medical practice. We believe, as we have always done, that in all special diseases of men and women, and in all operations necessary to be performed in the presence of person, it is not fitting or expedient that students of different sexes should attend promiscuously; that all special diseases of men should be treated by men in the presence of men only, and those of women, where it is practicable, by women in the presence of women only. It was this feeling, founded on the respect due to the delicacy of women as patients, perhaps more than any other consideration, which led to the founding of the Women's Hospital of Philadelphia. These the clinical demonstration of special diseases is made by lady physicians and before lady students alone. As we would not permit men to be present at such demonstrations, we would we be willing—out of regard to the feelings of men as patients, if for no other considerations—that our students should attend clinics where men are specially treated, and there has been no time in the history of our college when our students would intentionally do so, even in direct contravention of our known views. In nearly all of the great public hospitals, however, by far the larger proportion of cases suited for clinical illustration—whether medical or surgical—is of those which involve no necessary exposure, and are the results of diseases and accidents which men and women are equally allied, and which lady physicians are constantly called upon to treat. Into these clinics women also—often sensitive and shrinking, albeit poor—are brought as patients to illustrate the lectures, and we maintain that whenever it is proper to introduce women as patients there also it is just and in accordance with the feelings of the truest womanhood for women to appear as physicians and students.

We had arranged when our class was admitted to the Pennsylvania Hospital to attend on alternate clinic days only, so as to allow ample opportunity for the unembarrassed exhibition of special cases to the other students by the clinics.

We encouraged our students to visit the hospital, and we have been gratified to see how well they have conducted themselves. We have never had a complaint from the hospital authorities of our students, and we have had no reason to complain of the treatment our students received from the hospital officers. We have always had the kindness and courtesy of the hospital officers

NEWS OF THE DAY.

EUROPE.

Telegrams from Ismailia, on the Suez Canal, dated the 17th inst., announce the arrival at that point of the procession of vessels, headed by the Empress EUGENIE's yacht L'Aigle, after passing through the first part of the canal. At the shallowest part the depth is said to be nineteen feet, and varies generally from twenty-five to thirty feet in other portions. The entire fleet will sail for Suez, the Red Sea terminus, to-day. The Shipping Gazette, of London, pronounces the enterprise a magnificent success.

A Fenian demonstration at Waterford, Ireland, on Wednesday night, embraced a torch-light procession of five thousand men with music, and necessitated an extra Police force to preserve order.

A reception was given on Wednesday at Compiègne by the French Emperor, at which he was particularly cordial in his manner toward the American Minister; so much so as to excite comment in political circles in Paris.

A London dispatch says that the appointment of EMILE OLLIVIER to a position in the French Cabinet, before long, is spoken of again as probable.

A meeting between the Czar and the Emperor of the French some time this Winter, according to a dispatch from General FLEURY, the French Ambassador to Russia, has been agreed upon.

M. ROCHEFORT having made a satisfactory explanation to the editor of Le Peuple newspaper, Paris, the threatened duel has been avoided.

The Republican prisoners taken during the recent outbreak in Spain are not to be sent to Cuba. Señor OSMANA has left Madrid for Paris.

The Tyne boat crew have again defeated the Thames crew, this time on the Tyne course.

CUBA.

Telegraphic news from Havana to-day shows that the work of burning the sugar crop in the fields is prosecuted by the insurgents with vigor. Four plantations near Santiago, one at Trinidad and ten near Cienfuegos, have been burned since the 1st inst. Among the latter, it is said, is that of Mr. FOUVERZ, of New-York. The Civil Governor of Santiago proclaims the slaughter of 200 insurgents, and offers clemency to such as may submit, and threatens the chastisement of all revolutionists captured. The Captain-General has pardoned 200 political prisoners. A commission from the insurgent Government, it is understood in Havana, has arrived in Caracas, to induce the Government of Venezuela to recognize Cuban belligerency, and to permit recruiting for the Cuban army. The suffering and destitution in consequence of the cholera and smallpox at Santiago is intense.

GENERAL.

Thanksgiving Day was very generally observed in this City and vicinity. There were sermons in the churches, dinners at the charitable institutions, feasting in the home circle and parades by the target companies. The weather was fine and the holiday passed pleasantly. The day was observed generally throughout the country, almost every State in the Union having appointed the 18th for the special observance of Thanksgiving. At the National Capital religious services and social enjoyment marked the day in a manner not usual in that latitude.

The Mississippi State Fair Association opened its exhibition yesterday at Jackson, which was visited by about 2,000 persons.

A case of torpedoes fell from a hoisting machine in New-Orleans yesterday, and exploded, killing two men and damaging the building.

A dreadful crime was perpetrated at Pleasant Grove, near Huntington, Penn., on Wednesday night. Two men entered the dwelling of [illegible]

[illegible] Tax—Shall it be Repealed or Modified?

As the law which imposes a tax on incomes expires by limitation with the present fiscal year, it will devolve on the present Congress to determine whether the taxation of incomes shall cease with the present law, or be continued, and become henceforth a permanent feature of our system of taxation. The income tax was never popular with persons having large incomes, and we hear that a concerted effort is to be made to put an end to it. As men of wealth and high social position have the ability to make themselves not only heard, but respected, in halls of legislation, we may expect to see a strenuous effort made to prevent a continuance of the law, thus putting an end to the tax altogether.

We trust this effort may not succeed. In our opinion a tax on incomes more nearly approximates to a just tax than any other yet devised. "The subjects of every State," says ADAM SMITH, "ought to contribute toward the support of the Government as nearly as possible in proportion to their respective abilities; that is, in proportion to the revenue which they respectively enjoy under the protection of the State." No system of taxation so nearly enforces this equal contribution from the citizen as a tax on incomes. It is mainly a tax on realized wealth, and the exemption of $1,000 leaves it to fall almost exclusively on those who are able to bear its burdens. Every other system of taxation, however devised, is a tax on labor, and goes to enhance the cost of production. This tax cannot be charged even upon the consumer, but must be borne by the well-to-do and the rich. It compels no one to pay except from that which he has received.

But the law is denounced by those who seek its repeal as oppressive, inquisitorial, and as calculated to induce fraud, corruption and perjury. We admit that the present rate of five per cent. imposes a heavy burden upon the taxpayer. The tax-gatherer is never a welcome visitor; but when, after drawing from us throughout the year taxes in every form which human ingenuity can devise, both direct and indirect; after taxing our houses and our lands, our horses and carriages, our watches and our plate, the clothes we wear, the food we eat, the fuel we burn, the cigars we smoke and the whisky we drink, he comes at the end of the year to demand of us one-twentieth of all we have earned during the year,—and which, in a majority of cases, is from twenty-five to one hundred per cent. of the net accumulations or savings,—his presence is not agreeable. That the present rate of the income tax is oppressive, therefore, we admit, and it is a reason for congratulation that the rigid economy which is being introduced into every department of the Government, and the integrity and fidelity with which the taxes are being collected, give promise of an early relief from the heavy burden which the income tax now imposes.

But the fact that the rate of any particular tax is so high as to be oppressive, is no reason for abolishing it altogether. If the rate is too high, reduce it. Reduction of the income tax, therefore, and not its repeal, is the remedy which should be pressed on the consideration of Congress. No nation, we believe, which has ever tried an income tax has abandoned it. The experience of other nations shows that the longer it is continued the more popular it becomes. We now receive from the tax on incomes from $64,000,000 to $65,000,000 annually; reduce it to two per cent. and then enforce the law more thoroughly than it has ever been enforced, and we shall receive $20,000,000, even at the reduced rate. A two per cent. tax will not be oppressive, and we believe it will be borne more cheerfully than any [illegible] [illegible] Fire Commissioners are endeavoring to improve the system they have organized and efficiently administered. General SHALER has, however, slightly misapprehended the position we assumed. Without expressing a preference for any particular kind of apparatus, but only desiring that it should be capable of swifter application than the average steam engine, we advocated the multiplication of stations, so that the means of extinguishing fires may be more readily accessible for any emergency. Without directly questioning the wisdom of this policy, General SHALER claims that these additions would be attended with great expense, which is undoubtedly true. But that it is an expense which must eventually be assumed, a single fact will prove. In all that part of the City above Fourteenth-street, there are now stations for but twelve engines, which are distant from each other in all cases about half a mile, and in some instances nearly three miles. However sufficient these engines may be for present necessities, they are certainly not equal to prospective requirements, and it is plain that there must be an increase in the agencies at the disposal of the Fire Commissioners. This increase should, in the first instance, take some other shape than the steam engine. Some appliances less unwieldy than even the lightest of these would be equally serviceable before a fire has gained headway, and would be so much less expensive, both in first cost and for maintenance, that they might be multiplied to a much greater extent. Even with the improved system of giving alarms by telegraph, upon which General SHALER justly lays so much stress, as a powerful safeguard against disaster, there should be as many additional stations as possible. But the letter of General SHALER is a testimony that all matters pertaining to this important branch of the public service may be safely left to the wisdom and zeal of the Fire Commissioners. They have abundantly shown that they are not wedded to any favorite schemes, but are honestly and zealously searching for improvements.

The clergymen who prefer to take the "signs of the times" as a text for their sermons rather than a homely verse of Scripture, might easily find a subject for exhortation and denunciation in the audacity with which vice now shows its head in our midst. The sights and sounds to be met with in the streets of many European cities have often been severely stigmatized, but are we free from the same scandals? The most public thoroughfares are becoming those through which decent women can scarcely dare to walk alone. Not satisfied with assuming a monopoly of the streets, the depraved class have taken to giving dancing parties, under a fanciful name, and an account of these gatherings is duly given in the newspapers. The dresses of the dancers are described minutely, and the disgraceful orgies afford material for a half column in the best vein of "graphic" writers. Is all this to be taken as one sign of that moral progress which some of our public teachers assure us is going on?

Whatever may be the result of the application made in the Supreme Court on Wednesday, to strike off the roll of attorneys the names of ORSON A. HOUSE and EDWARD D. GERMAIN, it was very necessary that the application should be made. We do not prejudge the cases of either of the attorneys in question, when we say that it is essential to the credit of the Bar that accusations such as have been made against them should be properly inquired into. They are both charged with being concerned in certain "secret divorce" cases which have recently caused great scandal, and further tended to bring both Bench and Bar into disrepute. Mr. HOUSE is one of those attorneys who advertise their readiness to procure "divorce without publicity." He will have an opportunity of defending himself, and we only hope that the Supreme Court will deal out strict and impartial justice in the matter.

In referring to the last murder in Grand-street, the Tribune says "that the law against carrying firearms ought to be rigidly enforced." If there were any such law we would join heartily in this opinion, but firearms being excluded by the terms of the statutory provision against carrying concealed weapons, any person choosing to proclaim his cowardice by loading himself down with pistols can do so without becoming liable to any legal penalties. In view of the many homicides in this City, due exclusively to the fact that persons happening to quarrel have also happened to have pistols, such a law should be enacted. The pretence that it would infringe upon the constitutional right of the citizen to bear arms has such shadowy foundation that it should not prevent the Legislature from protecting society by the passage of the required law.

That very serious disturbance exists among the working classes in England cannot be doubted. Their leaders have attempted one or two abortive schemes for making their hardship known to the general public, but although they have failed, the agitation for relief has lost none of its vitality. What the sufferers want are these two things—more work and better pay; how they are to get them is a question which no one yet has been able to decide. The Government is too busy with Ireland to have any time to bestow on the suffering classes generally. The unemployed are not unnoticed, and the Administration every now and then adds to their number and their distress by closing a dockyard or reducing the wages in some other large Government establishment. A state of feeling is gradually being produced very dangerously resembling that which existed in France before the great Revolution. Whether statesmanship could allay it or not, we do not presume to decide, but certain it is that it leaves the subject alone, and that every month the difficulty of treating it becomes greater and greater, as with an obstinate disease which is only curable in its early stages.

It is not alone by the connivance of Coroners and Judges that criminals escape punishment. The fault rests very often with juries, who are either corrupt or stupid. A man was tried on Wednesday on a charge of murder. The jury listened to the evidence, but before giving a verdict they asked what was "the term of imprisonment for manslaughter." We need scarcely say that this was not their business. They were sworn to decide from the evidence whether the accused was guilty or not guilty, and they had nothing whatever to do with the sentence inflicted. They wanted to be judge and jury at the same time. They seemed disposed to decline to deliver any verdict, but when the Judge told them he certainly should not discharge them, and that they would have to remain all night, they brought in a verdict of "manslaughter in the third degree." The principle of "trial by jury" has been assailed of late years by more than one eminent jurist, and old Judges are often heard to declare that an intelligent and discriminating jury is one of the hardest things to find in the world. This reproach will not be removed until jurymen think more of their oaths and their duty to the public, than of their prejudices for or against the prisoner at the bar.

The recommendation of the Committee of the New-York Board of Education, that German be introduced as a branch of regular study by the Trustees in wards where there is a large element of German population, seems on the whole not unsound. But there are other circumstances worth consideration. It is true that there are wards where the teaching of that language would not be tolerated, and there the attempt to introduce it would undoubtedly fail. But would it not be useful to American children as well as German? The study of modern languages is a valuable branch of education, especially here. Not only for business purposes, but from a literary point of view, the language of GOETHE and SCHILLER and HUMBOLDT should be available by most youth, and the schools themselves might be strengthened by the acquisition of a new class of pupils were the opportunity given. The question, however, cannot be regarded as settled, even among the Germans themselves. Some of them are averse to the introduction of their native tongue in the schools at all, preferring to leave that behind, as they have all else of their nationality. What proportion of these latter are in New-York cannot now be estimated, but as, in some wards, future elections of Trustees will turn upon this issue, the exact proportion will be discovered.

A writer in the Galaxy for December takes a good many objections to a recent article in these columns on "Native and Foreign Talent." The article, he says, was written from the "Native American, or Know-Nothing" point of view—a complete misconception, as it appears to us, of the remarks in question. We did not seek to depreciate foreign writers or artists, but merely to plead for a more liberal encouragement of our own. If you pay well for good work you can get it, in literature as in everything else—and our publishers do not as a rule pay liberally for books by American authors. The Galaxy says that novels (for instance) of Americans are not generally so good as novels by foreign writers. May not the reason of this be that the field has not been at all cultivated? We certainly never suggested that "American artists and authors cannot stand the test of a comparison on intrinsic merits"—we meant to imply exactly the reverse, and it is for taking that view that our critic finds fault with us. It is another mistake on his part to suppose that we censured the lack of enterprise on the part of conductors of American magazines. With the Galaxy before us we could scarcely express any such opinion, for it is conducted with great enterprise and talent, and we willingly believe that its success has been won by dint of that very "liberality" which is as indispensable to the growth of any literature as food is to the human body.

In Mr. REVERDY JOHNSON's letter to the Earl of CLARENDON, of March 25, 1869, he thus writes: "My Government believes, as I am now advised, that it has a claim of its own upon Her Majesty's Government, because of the consequences resulting from a premature recognition of the Confederates during our late war." That is the view which has been consistently maintained by the Government, and approved by the people. Have those who demand the recognition of Cuban independence ever applied it to their own case? Have they ever considered how the proposed recognition would affect the position which we have taken with regard to England?

It is a universal and well-grounded complaint that Broadway is full of danger to those who use private carriages upon that thoroughfare. Every day, numbers of these vehicles narrowly escape being crushed to atoms, and their actual damage, or even destruction, is by no means rare. Of course, some of this arises from the unavoidable crowding of the street, but much more is due to the utter recklessness of drivers, particularly of express and general business wagons, and of the public stages. The expressman apparently acts upon the principle that his ponderous machine can and should smash anything that comes in his way, and so do other drivers of loads of heavy goods. And that strange-looking being, the stage "whip," contributes his share of the difficulty by ingenious methods of creating confusion. He gallops, or crawls, or stops, or backs just as it suits him. He will race with five or six of his tribe for half a dozen blocks, and then pull up at some street crossing, waiting for passengers which exist "in his mind's eye" alone. Of course, he smokes a long block. And yet there are City ordinances which meet these cases. The truth is, that the rule of travel along Broadway is not sufficiently understood and enforced by the Police. Why they are advantageously to instructed, not only to help timid foot passengers, but to compel drivers to be more in good order, without racing or loitering, or "cutting out" each other?

Here is a very hard case:—BENJAMIN SUMMERS and JOHN WATTS, citizens of Kentucky, were pursuing their lawful avocations one day when thirteen men set upon them, and demanded a full confession with reference to certain crimes. Whether SUMMERS and WATTS were unable to make the required disclosures, or were simply unwilling, does not appear—but the council of thirteen proceeded to try the effect of torture. In the absence of the rack and thumbscrew, they hung WATTS and his companion to a tree, and kept them there until they were nearly dead. Even then the men would not, or could not speak, and the Tribunes were obliged to let them go. The victims, having now recovered the use of their tongues, bring an action for $50,000 damages. After what they have gone through, they demand dollars apiece is not too much. But in a Vigilance Committee they to be subjected to actions for damages! If Judge LYNCH is likely so find a considerable falling off in the practice in his Court.

We have had occasional visitations of locusts on this continent, but East Indians would probably tell us that we have not seen the scourge at its worst. We see from a Bombay native paper which has reached us, that a flight of locusts recently passed over a district in the Western Presidency. An eye-witness says: "I calculate its length at seven miles, its breadth at five miles, and its depth at 200 to 400 feet." The crops in many parts were entirely consumed by these insects. In India locust visitations are looked for on an average once in seven years. Whenever they appear the villagers set to work beating "tom-toms," and this scares them away—as it would most living creatures. The Scotch bagpipes do not discourse very sweet music, but of all the distracting sounds ever heard, those emitted by a whole village beating tom-toms are described as the worst. It is at least seven years before the dim traditions of the dismal uproar are forgotten even by a tribe of locusts.

AMUSEMENTS.

Hasted.

The Helvetia Maennerchor gives its annual concert, for the benefit of the Swiss Benevolent Society of New-York, at Steinway Hall, this evening. The programme is exceedingly fresh, varied and interesting. This Swiss vocal society has grown steadily in public favor since its organization about twelve years ago, and may now stand in the first rank of our singing societies in point of numbers, as it does now in enthusiasm and esprit de corps. The organization includes a fine quartet, and the song they have chosen for this evening is well worth hearing. The choruses also have been thoroughly drilled, so we are confident that the entire concert will be very enjoyable. The proceeds go, as usual, to the Swiss Benevolent Society, with which many of the members are connected. The programme, published in another column, shows that a full orchestra is engaged, together with Mme. JOHANNSEN as soprano, and Mr. FREDERICK BERGNER as violoncellist.

To-night "Il Poliuto," the success of which was so decided on Wednesday, will be repeated at the Academy of Music. Lovers of the opera should not fail to see Signor LEFRANC and Miss KELLOGG in a work wherein they appear to such great advantage.

The second rehearsal of the Philharmonic Society takes place at 3:30 to-day. It has been extensively announced that Mrs. CHARLES HOULTON would sing on the occasion. We are, however, informed that the lady has changed her mind and will not appear to-day before the Society.

For the benefit of the Directress of the Richings English Opera Troupe "Il Trovatore" is advertised, for the first time this season, for to-night at the Grand Opera House.

FRERE HYACINTHE.

His Visit to New-Haven and Yale College—He Dines a New-England Thanksgiving Dinner in Litchfield County.

From Our Special Correspondent.

NEW-HAVEN, Thursday, Nov. 18, 1869.

The good people of this town have been honored with a visit this week from the notable FRERE HYACINTHE, of France. He arrived here on Monday in company with Rev. LEONARD W. BACON, of Williamsburg, and became the guest of Rev. Dr. BACON, at whose house he was called upon by the clergymen of the city, college professors, and a number of prominent citizens. During his stay he visited Yale College, going through its various buildings, attended morning prayers once, and also listened for a short time to one of Dr. BACON's lectures to the divinity students. With all that he observed and heard he expressed himself as highly pleased, it being the first institution of the kind he has seen in this country. The impression FRERE HYACINTHE produced on the distinguished scholars and clergymen here was most favorable and flattering to himself. While somewhat reserved in giving expression to his religious views and ecclesiastical relations, his calm demeanor and general appearance showed him to be a man of power and noble parts. On Wednesday he went up to Norfolk, a small village in Litchfield County, in this State, at the invitation of Rev. Dr. EDMUNDS, of that place, to enjoy a genuine New-England Thanksgiving dinner. The Frere seemed delighted at this extension of hospitality, and has, are this, been fully initiated into the mysteries of roast turkey, shoulders of ham, pork, vegetables—all the earth produces—and the wonderful array of pies which no other occasion draws out of ovens. From Norfolk he will proceed to Boston with Rev. Mr. BACON, who accompanies him as interpreter.

A Freight Train Collides with the Pullman West Train—Escape of the Passengers.

From the Cleveland (Wyoming) Argus, Nov. 13.

A railroad accident occurred near this city at about 6 o'clock yesterday morning, which might have been attended with serious loss of life, but for the presence of mind of the engineers and the superior strength of the Pullman cars. A freight train was started out from this city, going eastward. It is alleged that the conductor started out on his own responsibility, contrary to orders and instructions. His train met the Pullman lightning express at a point about two miles east of this city. It being down grade the freight could not stop. The engineer of the Pullman train showed great judgment and presence of mind by staying at his post and reversing the action of his engine. The result of the collision was the almost total destruction of the freight train. Its locomotive was nearly ruined and the cars heartily broken up, the wreck strewing the track for many rods. The damage to the passenger train was very slight. The drawheads of two cars were broken and the pilot of the engine destroyed. Strange to say, no person was injured on either train. The Pullman train was detained about three hours, until the track could be cleared and some slight injuries repaired. A large party of men were immediately dispatched from this city to the scene of the accident, and speedily cleared away the debris of the wrecked cars, as far as possible, for the passage of the Pullman train. The conductor of the freight is blamed for his unwarrantable conduct in starting out his train upon his own responsibility. We are informed this is the second accident which has occurred to his train within two weeks. The result of this accident proves the staunchness of the Pullman palace cars. How the fast train could withstand the shock of meeting a heavy freight train, on a down grade, without sustaining more damage, is a question hard to solve, and the fact can only be accounted for on the presumption that the superior strength and workmanship of the palace train saved it from total destruction, and preserved its passengers from a sudden and terrible death.

TELEGRAMS.

THE SUEZ CANAL.

Ceremonies at the Opening—The Passage Through the Canal to Ismailia Accomplished.

PARIS, Nov. 18.—The Journal Officiel publishes the following telegraphic account of the progress of the Empress of the French:

PORT SAID, Nov. 18.—Her Majesty arrived at Port Said 48-day where she was received, and subsequently visited on board her yacht L'Aigle by the Viceroy of Egypt and the Emperor of Austria, the Prince Royal of Prussia, the Prince and Princess of Holland, and the commandant of the man-of-war in the harbor. The Empress subsequently landed and assisted at a Te Deum and at the Mussulman prayers, which were chanted on the occasion of the inauguration of the canal. In the evening the shipping in the harbor was illuminated, and there was a display of fireworks on sea and shore.

ISMAILIA, ON THE SUEZ CANAL, Nov. 17.—The Imperial yacht L'Aigle, with the Empress on board and followed by forty vessels, has just anchored at Ismailia, having passed through the first part of the canal.

The Passage to Ismailia—Time—Night and a Misty Moon—The Depth of Water.

LONDON, Nov. 18.—The following dispatches have been received from the Isthmus of Suez:

ISMAILIA, Nov. 17—Evening.—The trip of the first part of the fleet with visitors was made from Port Said to this place in eight and a half hours. Four steamers have just arrived from Suez, the southern terminus of the canal, and met those from Port Said. The town, banks of the canal and vessels are illuminated, and the night is given up to festivities and rejoicing.

ISMAILIA, Thursday, Nov. 18—Noon.—Thirty-four steamers have arrived here, and others are expected. At the shallowest point between Ismailia and Port Said the water in the canal is nineteen feet, and the depth is generally twenty-five to thirty feet along the whole line. The festivities here are continued with great magnificence and enthusiasm. An immense crowd of visitors from all parts of the world are here. The number of guests who have been specially invited by the Khedive will exceed 3,000 Europeans and 16,000 Orientals. The expenditure of money is enormous. The entire fleet will start for Suez to-morrow.

The Canal Pronounced a Success.

LONDON, Nov. 18.—The Shipping Gazette, discussing the practical operation of the Suez Canal, says: "Whether the point of difficulty remains to be overcome here or there before the canal can be available for vessels of the largest tonnage is merely a question of detail to be settled by the constructors of the canal. As far as we are concerned, we can only point to the fact that the French engineers have redeemed their promise. The canal is open and is a magnificent success."

CUBA.

Destruction of Sugar Plantations—Two Hundred and Eighty Insurgents Killed—Cholera and Smallpox at Santiago—An Appeal to Venezuela from the Insurgents.

HAVANA, Nov. 18.—Mr. COWPER, the English Consul at Trinidad, is charged with connivance with the Captain of the brig Echo in committing an act of barratry in selling the brig's cargo without notifying her consignee. The action causes much comment among the merchants, and legal steps have been taken to procure justice.

The Second Battalion of Volunteers have gone to the Vuelta Abajo region. The insurgents in the neighborhood of Santiago have burned the plantations of Corestina, Resolucion, Santa Maria and Dolorjita. The Soledad plantation has been burned by insurgents from near Trinidad. Ten plantations in the vicinity of Cienfuegos have been burned since the 1st of November, including the Harmiguera plantation, belonging to POUYERT, of New-York. The civil Governor of Santiago issued a proclamation on the 12th inst., announcing the killing of 280 insurgents, and offering clemency to those who will immediately surrender to the Spanish authorities, but threatening to chastise all revolutionists captured. Captain-General DE RODAS has reduced the term of confinement of the prisoners at Cinco Villas one-fifth. He has also pardoned and liberated over two hundred prisoners, many of whom were committed for political offences. It is understood in Havana that a commission from the insurgent Government has arrived in Caracas for the purpose of inducing the Venezuelan Government to recognize the insurgents as belligerents, and to allow them to raise recruits for their army in Venezuela. The misery in Santiago, caused by cholera and smallpox, is increasing. General VALMASEDA has ordered that his salary be divided among the poor of Santiago.

A commission has been appointed to revise the duties on merchandise. The steamers Empire, for New-York, and Washington, for St. Nazaire, sailed to-day. The steamer Tiber sails to-morrow for Philadelphia.

PARAGUAY.

Lopez's Latest Revolution—Fresh Crimes Laid to his Charge—The Allies Inactive.

LONDON, Nov. 18.—Dates from Rio Janeiro to the 27th ult. have been received. According to the latest accounts from Paraguay President LOPEZ had transferred his headquarters and seat of Government to San Joaquin. It was reported that LOPEZ had killed his mother, one of his brothers and other persons, in consequence of his suspicion that they were engaged in a conspiracy against his life. The Allies had as yet made no movement, and it was supposed that active operations would be still longer deferred.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Fenian Demonstration in Waterford—Torchlight Procession—Another Near-Eared Match.

DUBLIN, Nov. 18.—A Fenian demonstration was made at Waterford last night. There was a torchlight procession, in which nearly 5,000 men took part. The bands played Fenian airs, the streets were crowded with spectators, an extra Police force was on hand, but did not interfere with the proceedings, and there was no disturbance.

LONDON, Nov. 18—The four-oared match between the Tyne and the Thames crews was rowed to-day on the River Tyne, over a course of three and three-quarter miles. The race was won by the Tyne crew, the winners of the last race on the Thames.

FRANCE.

Civility of the Emperor to Mr. Washburne—The French Cabinet—The Czar and Napoleon—The Threatened Duel.

LONDON, Nov. 18.—The Emperor gave a reception yesterday at Compiegne. He was cordial in his manner toward Mr. WASHBURNE, the American Minister, and paid him constant attention, which is much commented on in political circles. The probability that EMILE OLLIVIER will soon be appointed to a position in the Cabinet is again talked of. General FLEURY, French Minister to Russia, telegraphs from St. Petersburg that the Czar has agreed to meet the Emperor NAPOLEON this Winter.

The threatened duel between the editor of Le Pays and HENRI ROCHEFORT has been averted, the latter having made satisfactory explanations.

TURKEY AND EGYPT.

The Sultan to Present Another Ultimatum—Suspension of the Viceroy Threatened.

VIENNA, Nov. 18.—The Presse asserts that when the celebration of the opening of the Suez Canal is terminated the Sublime Porte will send another ultimatum to the Viceroy of Egypt, ordering him to accept the Turkish proposals without condition or to consider himself suspended from the Viceroyalty.

SPAIN.

The Republican Prisoners.

MADRID, Nov. 18.—The Republican prisoners are not to sent to Cuba. Señor OSMINA has gone to Paris.

HORRIBLE TRAGEDY.

A Man, His Wife and a Boy Brutally Murdered—The Victims Killed While at Supper—Robbery the Motive—Arrest of the Murderer.

HUNTINGTON, Nov. 18.—With the exception of PRONER's butchery at Philadelphia, the most horrifying slaughter that has ever occurred in Pennsylvania was committed last night in the small village of Pleasant Grove, in this township. From all the particulars that have been ascertained it appears that just after dark, and between the hours of six and seven o'clock, the dwelling of Mr. JOHN PERGNTOLA was entered by two fiends in human shape, and while the family, consisting of Mr. PERGNTOLA, his wife, and a boy about 12 years of age, named GARDNER, were eating their supper, shot PERGNTOLA through the head, killing him instantly, the boy GARDNER was dispatched in the same way, and then they split the wife's head open with an ax. The first intimation of the awful slaughter was the discovery of the house being on fire. On repairing to the scene the appalling spectacle met the gaze of the few neighbors who entered. There lay the mangled dead bodies of the victims covered with blood, the walls besmeared from floor to ceiling, and the brains of the victims oozing from their wounds. The murderers, after perpetrating the horrible crime, covered the dead bodies with bedclothes and then set fire to the house to cover up the deed. Suspicion at once rested on two men, who had been seen loitering about the neighborhood for some time past. It was learned that they took the night train from this place for the West. Dispatches were at once sent to the station agents and Police all along the Pennsylvania Road, and when the train arrived at Altoona, the suspected assassins were arrested and brought back to this place this morning. Their names are BADDERENNE and BOURRE. On their persons was found $280 of the plunder which prompted the terrible massacre. BOURRE has made a partial confession, and adds from this there is unmistakable evidence of their guilt.

It was generally understood that Mr. PERGNTOLA was possessed of considerable money. He was an industrious and estimable citizen, and it is with difficulty that the people are restrained from lynching the worse than murderers.

DISASTERS BY THE GALE.

A Train Blown from the Track—Several Cars, Baggage and Mail Master Destroyed—A Boy Killed and Several Persons Injured—The Gale on the Lakes.

HUDSON, N. Y., Nov. 18.—A violent gale prevailed in this vicinity yesterday, and serious damage was done at Chatham and on the line of the Harlem Railroad. The mail train on the Harlem Road, which left Chatham for New-York at 5 o'clock yesterday morning, was blown from the track by the power of the gale, near Boston Corners, and the entire train thrown down a steep embankment, the locomotive only remaining on the track. The baggage, mail and express cars were entirely destroyed by fire, together with the mails, baggage and express packages. A lad named PETER MCBRIDE, of Chatham, aged 13 years, was instantly killed. Several other passengers are reported seriously injured. WILLIAM VAN VLECK, brakeman, shoulder dislocated and otherwise injured; REUBEN F. BERLLIS, brakeman, cut in the head seriously; HIRAM JACOBUS, brakeman, seriously injured; ribs broken; JOHN HURD, express messenger, slightly injured; FRANK O'NEIL, baggage master, injured from inhaling heat and steam while attempting to save the baggage. The wounded were taken to Boston Corners, where every possible assistance is rendered them.

TORONTO, Nov. 18.—A gale set in last night, and continued throughout the day. The following marine disasters are reported: Schooner Montezuma, from Toledo, for Ogdensburg, with lumber, ashore at Point Peters, near Picton; she will probably go to pieces. Schooner Asoo, ashore at Wellington's Square and breaking up. Schooner Garibaldi ashore at Mimico. Schooner Reko beached off the Queen's Wharf, Toronto, and another vessel dragging her anchor and likely to go ashore. The Captains report it the roughest night they ever experienced on the lake.

ANHERSTBURGH, Canada, Nov. 18.—Schooner Eagle Wing was wrecked near Oxford, Lake Erie, last night. All hands were saved, except the steward, who fell from the rigging and was drowned.

PICTOU, Canada, Nov. 18.—Schooner Thorsica, from Port Dalhousie, for Oswego, with wheat, is ashore at Nicholson Island and will probably be a total loss. Schooner Montezuma, reported ashore yesterday at West Point, is breaking up, and lumber is coming ashore in every direction. Schooner Prince Edward froze in while sailing down Long Beach, and had to remain there until the steamer Rochester came along and broke up the ice.

BUFFALO, Nov. 18.—It is feared much damage was done on the lakes by the gale. Part of the Central Railroad track on the Niagara Falls branch, near the breakwater, was torn up by the gale last evening.

CANADA.

The Reciprocity Question—No Official Report from the Red River.

OTTAWA, Nov. 18.—It is stated on good authority that there is no truth in the report from Washington that the Government of the Dominion had threatened retaliatory measures if the present restriction of commercial intercourse was continued with the United States. The Government have not received anything official from Governor MCDOUGALL relative to the reported opposition to entry into the Northwest Territory. No application has, as yet, been made for an armed force to escort him.

Murder in Louisiana—A Prominent Planter Shot through the Heart.

NEW-ORLEANS, Nov. 18.—The Times says: "On Wednesday night Mr. UREBE SEMPERAY, a noted planter in the Parish of St. Charles, was brutally murdered on his plantation by a negro, who shot him through the heart. Mr. SEMPERAY was universally respected throughout the country. Louisiana loses one of her most prominent citizens."

Murder by an Army Officer—Alleged Slanderer of a Sister the Cause.

KOKOMO, Ind., Nov. 18.—Lieutenant W. W. DOUGHERTY, of the Regular Army, on furlough and visiting his parents here, shot and killed JOSEPH VAN HORN, at the Sherman House, in this city, at noon to-day. It is alleged that VAN HORN circulated slanderous reports about DOUGHERTY's sister, and on DOUGHERTY meeting VAN HORN he requested him to recall his remarks. He repeatedly refused, and not denying the report, DOUGHERTY fired five shots at him, three of them taking effect. VAN HORN died almost instantly. DOUGHERTY was immediately arrested and is now in jail. The affair has caused great excitement, as both parties are connected with the first families of this city.

THE ARMY SOCIETIES.

The Army of the Tennessee—Election of Officers—The Society of the Cavalry of the West.

LOUISVILLE, Nov. 18.—The Society of the Army of the Tennessee met again at 11:30 o'clock this morning. General SHERMAN and SHERIDAN appeared upon the stage, and were greeted with cheers. The hall was well filled with members and spectators. Reports were made by the Corresponding and Recording Secretaries and Treasurer. The Committee appointed at the last reunion to select a design for a badge to be adopted by the Society, made a report, which was read. The Committee on the nomination of officers reported a list, as follows:

General W. T. SHERMAN, President; General G. M. Dodge, First Vice-President; General C. C. Walcott, Second Vice-President; General J. M. Loomis, Third Vice-President; General G. M. Hosk, Fourth Vice-President; Colonel W. T. Coleman, Fifth Vice-President; General W. J. Landrum, Sixth Vice-President; Colonel L. M. Dayton, Recording Secretary; General A. Hinckenlooper, Corresponding Secretary. The nominations were elected by acclamation. General W. F. FORCE was chosen Treasurer. The Committee on the time and place of holding the next meeting, reported in favor of Cincinnati as the place, and October as the time. The Committee on the McPherson monument made a report, in which it was recommended that a committee be appointed to memorialize Congress for an appropriation of a sufficient number of cannon, captured by McPherson's command, to cast the statue. Adjourned.

The Society of the Cavalry of the West met at the Galt House to-day, General WILSON presiding. The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved. An informal report of the Committee on Permanent Organization was read, and the time of the Committee further extended. The Committee on the Badge reported that no definite action had been taken. Some remarks were made by the President calling attention to the objects of the Association. Major HOSKA introduced a project for writing a history of the cavalry operations of the West. The name of the Society was changed to that of the Society of the Cavalry of the West. Major L. M. HOSKA, of Cincinnati, was designated the historian, and the members were requested to furnish him with all the material within their reach for his use in compiling a history of the Society. The President was authorized to appoint a committee on soliciting membership and collecting the news. The annual dues were fixed pro tempore at $1. The following officers were chosen for the ensuing year: President, General JAMES H. WILSON, with seven Vice-Presidents; Recording Secretary, S. Y. SHAPLAN; Corresponding Secretary and Historian, L. M. HOSKA; Treasurer, M. R. WALLACE. The Society adjourned subject to the call of the President, the time and place to be selected by himself.

PACIFIC COAST.

The Coroner's Inquest in the Railroad Slaughter—The Victorians Petitioning for Annexation—Advices from Sitka—An Island not on the Chart.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 16.—The Coroner's jury impaneled to ascertain the cause of the death of sixteen persons killed by the railroad accident on Sunday morning, met at Alameda last evening. After hearing the testimony of several witnesses they adjourned until Wednesday night. The evidence of the switch tender at Simpson's Station revealed in him an entire ignorance of his duties. Although having a time table he could neither read nor write. He did not know which train had the right to the track. The United States steamer Newbern arrived from Sitka, via Forts Wrangel, Tongass and Simpson. General G. P. SHAW, United States Army, and VINCENT COLYER, United States Special Indian Commissioner, were passengers.

VINCENT COLYER, who arrived here from Alaska and British Columbia this morning, carries with him a petition signed by forty prominent citizens of Victoria, addressed to President GRANT, praying for the annexation of British Columbia to the United States. Another petition of similar import will be forwarded to the Queen. The document is strongly worded, and sets forth with great force the insulated, helpless condition of the colony, and the imperative necessity of forming a political alliance with the United States. Mr. COLYER represents that the feeling in favor of annexation received a new impulse from the recent note of Earl GRANVILLE, urging the British Columbians to affiliate with the Canadian Dominion, they regarding it little less than insulting, as it would increase their burdens, without affording either political protection or material relief. Sitka advices to Oct. 20 have been received, giving satisfactory accounts of the loyalty of the natives, and of the friendliness of the Indians. The health of the garrison was good, and the fisheries were prosperous. The weather was mild. The United States steamer Lincoln had returned from St. Paul Island, in Behring Sea. While one of the Lincoln's boats was attempting to land on the island, it was swamped and three sailors were drowned, named RICHARD LIVINGSTON, LEWIS GARLIN and JOHN BECK. The United States ship Suwanee was in port. On the down trip of the steamer Newbern, she narrowly escaped shipwreck by running on an island directly in her course. The island is situated in latitude 59° 30', longitude, 140° 5' east, and is 10 miles long and five wide. The island is not laid down in the "Lap Chart," No. 9 of the North Pacific Survey, issued from the Hydrographic Bureau at Washington, in July, 1866. The Imperial Mining Company has levied an assessment of $10 a share delinquent Dec. 20. The codfishing fleet of the North Pacific are all in. The season's catch foots up 1,000,000.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 17.—The steamer Golden City sailed for Panama to-day with 200 passengers and $336,000 in treasure, of which $450,514 was for England, $55,500 for France, $20,000 for Panama, $10,000 for San Jose, $10,000 for Guatemala. All of the banks and public offices will be closed to-morrow, and business generally suspended. The Truckee Railroad was completed to Virginia City yesterday. There was no celebration on account of the funeral obsequies of Judge BALDWIN.

The Mississippi State Fair—A Successful Opening.

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 18.—The exhibition by the State Fair Association opened yesterday, under the most favorable auspices, and gives promise of a grand success. J. M. WIMSON, the President, delivered an address. The display in every department is very fine, especially in machinery. Two thousand visitors were present during the day.

Navy Yard Intelligence.

The work of retrenchment is still going on at the Navy Yard. Sixteen men were discharged from the equipment department on Wednesday, and there is a gradual reduction going on in all the departments day by day.

The Canonicus, first-class war ship, went into the dry dock on Wednesday for thorough repair. As soon as she shall have been completed, the Tomoka, a third-rate gunboat, will be taken on the dry dock for repair. Notwithstanding the secrecy with which affairs at the Brooklyn Navy Yard are conducted, it has leaked out that the arms and ammunition carried off on the Albany have been purchased by President BABS from this Government. It is also understood that BABS has obtained a man-of-war, not the Albany, for a nominal sum.

The Severn returned from her trip on Wednesday evening, and will leave in a day or two for the West Indies. She had been absent two days, and has proved herself one of the fastest, as she is also one of the finest, vessels in the navy.

Large numbers of recruits are going daily detailed into the receiving Vermont, and from that vessel to the vessels paying for the West Indies.

SPECIE PAYMENTS.

Letters from Attorney-General Hoar, Senator Sumner and Hon. Morrice Maynard.

From the Boston Commercial Advertiser, Nov. 17.

It begins to be manifest that popular sentiment will compel an early attention to the question of resumption, on the part of Congress, and we anticipate that it will form the subject of the most important debate in the House at the forthcoming session. The sentiment that a depreciated currency is no longer a necessity, but in fact becoming a regress to the nation because it is unnecessary, is a growing sentiment with all classes of our people. The sudden and disastrous collapse of the recent gold conspiracy in Wall-street, which crumbled to dust and ashes at the touch of our Financial Minister, threw a brilliant light on the situation and showed how completely it was under the mastership of Mr. BOUTWELL. It was a splendid demonstration of the power of the Treasury in coping with and thwarting the ablest and most desperate of the gold gamblers, and of its ability to put a sudden stop to the whole business at pleasure. We apprehend that the Administration, even if it had the disposition, will not be allowed to go back of Gold Resumption of its monetary strength. It must continue to go forward, and now with more rapidity, in the march toward resumption.

We do believe, indeed, that this is the intention of General GRANT, and that his Cabinet is practically a unit on the question of early resumption. Gold may be a good thing to have, but we cannot advise any one to keep it, so long as they can dispose of it at the present price. It must come down and that soon. We think the following from Attorney-General HOAR may, without a great stretch of probability, be considered a practical exposition of the views and a foreshadowing of the policy of the Administration on the question of Resumption:

LETTER FROM ATTORNEY-GENERAL HOAR.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15, 1869.

Hon. E. G. Spaulding:

MY DEAR SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 6th inst., and with it a copy of your Financial History of the War, for which I desire to return my thanks.

The constant pressure upon my time has prevented me from giving the book more than a cursory inspection, but it seems to be a valuable contribution to our financial history, and throws considerable light upon the important question of a return to specie payments. I am one of those who believed that it was the interest as well as the duty of the nation to return at once to the true and solid standard of value as soon as active hostilities ceased; but we should have treated the currency as we did our armies—regarding the volunteers and greenbacks alike as necessities of war, to be dispensed with as fast as possible on the return of peace. I think we made a great mistake in not doing so; that the short-cut method was the safest and best; that the only way to reach the object is by a steady and persistent contraction of the currency—a painful process whenever it comes, no doubt, but harder and worse for us the longer it is delayed.

I hope that Congress will address itself with courage and constancy to the solution of the problem as soon as it meets; and will feel assured that the American people have intelligence enough to support those who do it. My views on the subject are of little importance to anybody, but, as an American citizen, I should be sorry and ashamed to find my country unable and unwilling, in a time of peace and prosperity, to provide for its over-due paper. Very respectfully,

E. R. HOAR.

This is important, coming from a member of the Cabinet. But we have reason to think, further, that it foreshadows some affirmative action in the House, or at least a powerful expression of affirmative sentiment on the part of that body. Hon. HORACE MAYNARD, of Tennessee, was one of the few men of the South who remained in Congress during the war, and always supposed the Union cause. Having been for many years a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, he is one of the most influential men in the House. He was a member of that Committee during the Winter of 1861-2, when the Legal Tender act, the Bank bill and other financial measures were matured, and he still retains that position. His opinions in favor of immediate resumption are peculiarly valuable at the present time. The following letter from Mr. MAYNARD, on that question, will be read with interest:

LETTER FROM HON. HORACE MAYNARD.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 9, 1869.

Hon. E. G. Spaulding:

DEAR SIR: Thanks for the book, as well as the copy sent me. It is well timed and much needed. So successful were the financial arrangements during the war that people incline to regard them as automatic, as accomplished, with no special credit to anybody.

Of all who were concerned, you were the one to have prepared the book—entitled as you are, prominently, to the credit of the great measures which carried the nation so triumphantly through the financial ordeal of war. While I did not feel at liberty to participate very actively in the passage of acts which must affect other portions of the country far more seriously than that which it was my fortune to represent, it gratifies me to remember that, both in the Committee of Ways and Means and in the House, they received my unfailing support.

As a result, we now have the best currency ever known in the nation. Let it now be made convertible into coin at the pleasure of the holder, and nothing would be left to be discussed. Why this has not been done, why it is not done, why it should not be done, I confess, after all I have read and heard, I am not able to see.

One of these days some bold man will take the step, and then everybody will wonder why it had not been taken years before. Would that you were again at your old place in the House.

I am, very truly yours,

HORACE MAYNARD.

Third Annual Ball of the Literary Cluster Society.

The association of young men known as the "Literary Cluster" held their third annual ball at Apollo Hall last evening. The night certainly was all that could be desired, and a goodly company of young and old tripped the "light fantastic" to the witching music of Wallace's Band. Mr. JACOBS is President of the Society, Mr. HARRIS, Chairman of the Floor Committee and Mr. MOSS, Chairman of the Committee of Arrangements, deserve credit for their success in arranging and managing matters. With but one thing might we find fault, that when it says "to begin at 9 o'clock precisely" on the ticket it does not mean anywhere in the neighborhood of 10 o'clock.

Tidewater Receipts.

From the Albany Argus, Nov. 18.

The quantity of flour, wheat, corn and barley left at tide water during the second week in November, in the years 1868 and 1869, was as follows:

	Flour, barrels.	Wheat, bushels.	Corn, bushels.	Barley, bushels.
1868	32,100	243,000	154,200	92,800
1869	37,600	1,252,000	238,000	297,100
Inc.	14,500	Inc. 239,000	Inc. 173,400	Inc. 204,300

The aggregate quantity of the same articles left at tidewater from the commencement of navigation to the 14th of November inclusive, during the years 1868 and 1869, was as follows:

	Flour, barrels.	Wheat, bushels.	Corn, bushels.	Barley, bushels.
1868	876,600	11,822,000	14,247,400	1,038,100
1869	826,400	11,587,000	6,081,000	1,621,000
Dec.	50,400	Dec. 235,000	Dec. 8,166,000	Inc. 582,900

The receipts of the new crop of barley, so far, are 1,619,000 bushels, against 1,039,300 bushels in 1868.

By reducing the wheat to flour the quantity of the latter left at tidewater this year, compared with the corresponding period last year, shows an increase equal to 608,500 barrels flour.

The following comparative table shows the quantity of some of the principal articles of produce left at tidewater from the commencement of navigation to and including the 14th of November in the years indicated:

	1867.	1868.	1869.
Canal opened	May 2.	April 22.	May 6.
Flour, bbls	1,000,000	876,600	826,400
Wheat, bushels	9,240,000	11,822,000	11,587,000
Corn, bushels	14,978,000	14,247,400	6,081,000
Barley, bushels	3,031,100	1,038,100	1,621,000
Oats, bushels	7,882,100	10,000,000	8,464,000
Rye, bushels	317,300	600,200	119,900
Malt, bushels	338,100	879,300	315,800

Scrofulous Disgustation.

All the organs of the body are, so to speak, the guardians of the stomach. In that living laboratory is prepared the nourishment required to sustain them, and by the vessels and ducts connected with the digestive apparatus, that nourishment is conveyed to every part of the system. Upon the quality and quantity of this element of life, and upon the manner in which it is distributed and apportioned, physical health entirely depends, and as the mind inevitably sympathizes with the body, the vigor of the one is absolutely necessary to the well-being of the other.

It is because HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS accomplishes this double object, that it enjoys a reputation as a preventive and curative never heretofore attained by any medicinal preparation. But its direct beneficial operation upon the organs of digestion and nutrition is not its sole recommendation. By its mild comprehensive and regulative influence on well as the assimilative organs; gently moving the bowels, promoting healthful evaporation through the pores, rousing the inert liver from its torpor, and imparting harmonious and natural action to the whole animal machinery. This average result is not produced by any of the nauseous drugs which are used so lavishly in the old school practice, dictated by Pharaohs; but by mild, safe and agreeable vegetable agents intermixed with a pure and mellow stimulant which diffuses their influence through the system, and renders their sanitary properties active and effective.—Advertisement.

FINANCIAL.

A LIMITED AMOUNT OF THE 7-40 GOLD BONDS
Of the Chicago, Danville and Vincennes Railroad are offered for sale by Messrs. W. BAILEY LANG & CO., Merchants, No. 36 Old-st., New-York.
They are $1,000 Bonds, issued upon a railroad nearly one-half completed, traversing a country unsurpassed by any in the first counties of a large and profitable business.
They are secured by first mortgage on 140 miles of this first-class road, its stable, and all present and future acquired property of the Company.
They bear a high rate of interest for a long period of time—seven per cent. gold for forty years—and a small ratio to the cash value of the realty upon which they are issued.
They create an interest liability of the Company of only $1,260 per mile, or less than one-third that of some great roads of the country whose bonds have ranked very high.
These facts, added to the safeguards thrown around each and every bond, combine to render these UNEQUALED SECURITIES, and really the most desirable in the market for investment.
Price 98 and accrued interest in currency, the right being reserved to advance, upon due notice.
Pamphlets, with maps and full detail, furnished on application.
Adhering to our positive rule never to offer anything for sale which we do not ourselves believe to be good, we add that we have personally examined this entire line of road, finished and projected, as well as the country through which it runs, and in full character and capacity for verifying the foregoing estimates; the result of which is, that we offer these securities with every confidence in their full worth and soundness.

COUPONS PAYABLE SEMI-ANNUALLY,
ON THE 1ST OF APRIL AND OCTOBER IN THE CITY OF NEW-YORK.
These bonds are regarded as first-class in every respect, and very desirable for investors.

WE OFFER FOR SALE, AT 95 AND ACCRUED INTEREST,
THE FIRST MORTGAGE SINKING FUND CONVERTIBLE 7 PER CENT. BONDS
OF THE
BURLINGTON, CEDAR RAPIDS AND MINNESOTA RAILROAD COMPANY, HAVING FIFTY YEARS TO RUN.
PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST PAYABLE IN GOLD COIN,
FREE OF GOVERNMENT TAX.
Having thoroughly examined the security offered on these Bonds, we confidently recommend them as a safe and first-class investment.
These bonds are only issued upon each section of the road as fast as the same is completed and in successful operation. Two and a half millions have been expended on this road. Eighty-three miles have now been completed and are in operation, new large earnings, and balance of the line is rapidly progressing.
Pamphlets and full particulars can be had on application.
HENRY CLEWS & CO.,
No. 32 Wall-st., New-York.
PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD COMPANY,
PRESIDENT'S OFFICE,
PHILADELPHIA, May 11, 1865.
Messrs. Henry Clews & Co., No. 32 Wall-st.:
GENTLEMEN: In answer to your request of the 17th ult. for our opinion as to the condition and prospects of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Minnesota Railway, passing through a country through which it runs, and the probable success of the enterprise, we would state, that before accepting the trust imposed upon us by the First Mortgage Bonds of this Company, we satisfied ourselves of the correctness as to the practicability of the enterprise.
The road starts at one of the most flourishing cities on the Mississippi, follows up the great valley, and runs in a direction which will bring it through a country of great wealth, connecting at prominent points along the line with six different railroads, now in active operation, nearly all of which, must be, more or less, tributary or feeders to this road.
This road is destined to become, in connection with others, now in operation, or being constructed, one of the great trunk lines from Lake Superior via St. Paul, Minneapolis, Burlington, St. Louis, and to the East, over the Toledo, Peoria and Warsaw, and the Pennsylvania Railroads, which we regard as a great and paying investment.
But aside from this, the populous condition of the country along the line of this road, its great productiveness and wealth, give sufficient guarantee of a good local business, which, for any road, is the best reliance for success.
A good index of the prosperity and wealth of the country through which this road passes may be found in the fact that Scott County, Iowa, has over a million and a quarter of dollars subscribed and expended by individuals residing along the line in pushing on 100 miles of this road, and it is also a strong proof of the local prosperity and wealth of the country.
Yours, very respectfully,
J. EDGAR THOMPSON,
President of the Penna. R. R. Co.,
CHARLES L. FROST,
Pres't of the Tol., Peoria & Warsaw R. R. Co.,

THANKSGIVING.

old belief in God's special providence has been strengthened here far more than elsewhere. His hosts that other nations will likewise acknowledge the bounteous providence of God has been verified here. For of this Thanksgiving Day is the testimony. Now seeing then that the first part of the prophecy of Zechariah—"And the Lord shall be acknowledged the King over all earth"—has been fulfilled in our beloved America, we have reason to believe that the second part will, in the Lord's time, be also fulfilled. "On that day shall the Lord be known as one, and His name shall be one."

Imposing Services at St. Alban's—Solemn High Mass After the Ritualistic Formula—Sermon by Rev. Father Bradley.

The Thanksgiving services at St. Alban's Episcopal Church, Forty-seventh-street and Lexington-avenue, yesterday, were of the highest Ritualistic character, and attracted a very large congregation. The morning prayers began at 10 o'clock, and at their close there was communion service, or what is designated among Ritualists the "mass." Rev. Father MORRILL was celebrant, Rev. Father BRADLEY deacon, and Rev. Father HOYES sub-deacon. Over the altar was an Agnus Dei, such as is often seen among the altar ornaments of Roman Catholic churches, and which, in this instance, may be taken to be the altar-piece. Were this a church of the Roman communion the space thus taken up would probably be occupied by a sculptured or pictorial representation of the great English Saint whose name the church bears. On either side of the altar was a large candelabrum, lighted. On the altar itself were numbers of candlesticks, the candles in which were not lighted until the communion service began, when the altar was in one blaze of light, presenting a scene somewhat similar to that exhibited by a Catholic altar during the celebration of a solemn High Mass. The vestments worn by the clergymen were gorgeous in appearance. They are not such as are to be seen in Catholic churches, however. This distinction is peculiarly noticeable in the outer vestment of the celebrant, which, in the Roman Church, is known as the "chasuble," and is entirely open at the sides, being of equal length behind and before, and having an opening in the central or connecting portion, through which it is drawn over the priest's head. The outer vestments of the deacon and sub-deacon are also different from those used in the Roman churches. The main idea on which the Ritualistic vestments are cut is, apparently, to strike a medium between those of the Roman and Greek Churches, and are patterned more nearly after the latter than after the former. The services here were laid down in the Book of Common Prayer, and yesterday were mostly all intoned, instead of being simply read. The sub-deacon read the Epistle, and the deacon the Gospel, as at solemn High Masses in the Catholic Church. There is also the Credo (in English, of course) chanted by the celebrant and sung by the choir; the Preface, before consecration, intoned by the celebrant; the Pater Noster, the Agnus Dei, the Gloria in Excelsis—the latter being sung after, instead of previous to, the consecration—and a Confessio (in English, of course), and the last mentioned a far different one from the Catholic Confession, which implies a confession of sin not only to God, but also to "the Blessed Mary, ever virgin; the blessed St. Michael, archangel; the blessed St. John the Baptist, the holy Apostles St. Peter and St. Paul, and to all the saints," and beseeching all those to "pray to the Lord our God for me." [the person so publicly confessing.] This form of confession cannot, of course, be used in the Episcopal Church, because that Church does not hold the doctrine that it is lawful or right to invoke the intercession of the saints. The lavabo, or washing of the fingers by the officiating priest after putting the wine in the chalice is done exactly after the manner of the Roman ritual, the attendant acolyte pouring the water. The Elevation of the Host, so prominent a feature of the Catholic service, and the most solemn portion of the Mass in Catholic Church, is here almost entirely omitted. Indeed, the priest in elevating the consecrated species, and the chalice containing the wine (which bread and wine are, by all Catholics, believed to be, after the words of consecration are pronounced, the real body and blood of Jesus Christ, whole and entire under each form,) are scarcely elevated at all; certainly the act is not done so as to be noticeable, except to those who are closely scrutinizing every movement of the celebrant. The Benediction, given in the Catholic Church after the Ite missa est, or just before the reading of the last Gospel, was yesterday given by the celebrant in the same manner as in the Roman Communion, by making the sign of the Cross over the people, at which time the worshipers, as in the Catholic Church, all reverently crossed themselves. There was not the genuflexion which invariably is seen in the Catholic Church whenever an attendant passes in front of the altar, except after the ceremony of consecration and while the species remained on the altar; at all other times a simple inclination of the head took the place of the genuflexion—a fact attributable to there being here no tabernacle, as on the Catholic altar, where the Sacred Host is kept at all times, whether Mass is being celebrated or not. Another feature of the Ritualistic service is the bowing of the head whenever the Adorable Name is spoken at any time, whether during the service proper or by the preacher who may be discoursing from the pulpit. In this the Ritualists and Catholics are in full accord.

We have been thus particular in mentioning the main peculiarities of yesterday's service at St. Alban's, in order to correct an erroneous impression entertained by many, to the effect that Episcopal Ritualism and the Catholic ceremonial of the Mass are precisely alike save as to the language accompanying the ceremonies. Any Catholic will see at once that the difference are wide, both as to vestments and ceremonial; but the casual Protestant observer might naturally suppose the ceremonies of these two communions to be more nearly assimilated than they really are.

The sermon yesterday was by Rev. Father BRADLEY, who in an able discourse averred that it was meet and proper to thank God for his manifold mercies, and contended that the most acceptable act of worship whereby men could thus render thanks was by devoutly joining in the service of the Mass. He then went on to elucidate the doctrine of the Holy Eucharist, and made an earnest argument in its defence, taking precisely the same ground that is held by the Catholic Church as to the real presence in the Blessed Sacrament. The musical services were of an excellent character.

Discourse of Rev. A. P. Putnam, at the First Universalist Church.

"Yea, when they had made them a molten calf and said, This is thy God that brought thee up out of Egypt and had wrought great provocations; yet thou in thy manifold mercies forsookest them not in the wilderness; the pillar of the cloud departed not from them by day to lead them in the way; neither the pillars of fire by night, to show them light and the way wherein they should go. Thou gavest also Thy good spirit to instruct them, and withholdest not thy manna from their mouth, and gavest them water for their thirst."—Nehemiah, ix., 18, 19, 20.

Mr. PUTNAM began his discourse by saying that large numbers of persons are unhappy because they allow the evils of life to occupy too much of their thoughts, and because they do not remember or recognize sufficiently life's gifts and mercies. In the wider survey of the nation and of general society, we often act and feel in the same way, dwelling so exclusively upon the darkest side of things that we lose sight of God's guiding pillars of cloud and fire. His spirit of instruction and life, and the manna and water, we forget, and imagine that as a people we are hastening on to our ruin. There are, indeed, causes for anxiety and fear. The preacher proceeded to give a picture of the more alarming sins and evils of our land and time. Yet, admitting these evils and acknowledging their importance, as he urged, Mr. PUTNAM contended, still remained, and to this he would especially call attention, The Iron Age has not yet come. Astrea and the gods are with us still. Rather God is with us, as He was with the fathers and their children. His people of yore. Among the causes or reasons for gratitude and praise are the renewed and expanding Republic, the heroic men and women who are urging Men in the paths of true greatness and renown, and the vast opportunities and facilities for effective struggling and conserving classes of people. The speaker also dwelt upon the blessings, comforts and sanctities of the home, and upon the instructions and elevating influences that come to us from the better developments of the age, and from the higher teachings of art, literature, science and religion. Above all, he said, we should be lifted in our gratitude touched, as we remember the great spiritual revelations which have been made to us in history, and especially in Jesus Christ, and as we bear in mind the eternal truths and immortal hopes which are thus made our own. So is it seen that however much may have been taken from us, more yet remains. Yes, God remains, and so long as He is with us, we may give thanks and be glad, and should attest our gratitude by being co-workers with Him and His Christ for the redemption of the world from error and sin.

Discourse of Rev. George F. Pentecost at the Hanson-place Baptist Church, Brooklyn.

"Let us come before His presence with thanksgiving."—Psalm xcv., 2.

The preacher said that while it was a day of thanksgiving and gladness, it was also prominently one of holy joy and religion, one in which all "should bow down and kneel before the Lord," their maker. He then directed the attention of the congregation to the simple theme of "thanksgiving," showing that it was an ordinance approved of God, and Thanksgiving Day should be observed on that account, not alone because the President of the United States or the Governor of this State had recommended it. There was also a peculiar propriety in such a service, because of the utter unworthiness of man to receive the blessings they had at the hands of their Maker. Let them never forget their dependence upon him. The preacher enumerated the special causes for thanksgiving during the past year. The harvests were large in length, and of its place the usual thanksgiving for the year were enjoyed.

Discourse of Rev. T. Dewitt Talmage in the General Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn.

"O, give thanks unto the Lord; for He is good; for His mercy endureth forever."—Psalm cxxxvi., 1.

Crowds of passengers leave the City for homes in the country, and thousands have come from the country to mix their rejoicings with kindred in the City on this festal day. Mirth and joy did much abound in all their homes over these happy reunions, especially as the blessings of the past year were passed in review before them in conversation. In the morning the churches resounded with loud hosannas, and in the evening their homes were lighted up with the beaming smiles of the aged and the merry laughter of the young. There was cause for thankfulness on account of a whole world filled with peace and joy. For the first time in many years this nation enjoyed peace. It had been born again, and was living its new life in prosperity and power. Political quarrels had ceased; only in the City and State did we have skirmishing along the lines, but everybody looking to a better time—a better hope. The nation had like a strong ship, passed over an ocean of difficulties; had ridden the tempest out nobly, and arrived at the haven of peace in safety. There was a time when the nations of the Old World, some of them, looked over at us, and said that ship of State must founder—must go down—could not weather the storm; but it had, and, notwithstanding all these idle predictions, we were safely in port and our interests were secure secured. There was peace and unity in the Church. The broken link of the Old and New-School Presbyterian Churches had been mended; the spirit of union was renewed, and then they were able to sit round the same ecclesiastical fireside and make merry over what had been done. Soon they might expect to rejoice over the nuptials of the Methodists North and the Methodists South into one communion, for the spirit of civil and religious liberty was marching on. During the year the harvests had been unusually abundant, our fisheries had been successful, our wealth had increased, and our national debt had been greatly reduced. Amid all these causes for thanksgiving they should remember the wants of the suffering poor. As they of that congregation sat down to their sumptuous feasts, let them not grieve as they looked over toward the vacant chairs, for God had enabled them to endure every loss with that fortitude and strength which only Christ gives, comforts and consolations of a free Gospel could impart, and let them rejoice in that they who had gone heaed were celebrating a better and happier thanksgiving in the mansions of the skies.

Discourse of Rev. Dr. Hodge before the Congregations of the Eastern Baptist and the First Baptist Mariners' Churches.

"But can ye not discern the signs of the times?"—Matt., xvi., 3.

The sermon was begun with an allusion to the improvements of the age, which were progressing with a rapidity quite astonishing, grand results being accomplished, which a few years ago were not thought of as possibilities—in all of which we can see our Heavenly Father's hand. Notwithstanding this, however, there are clouds dark and threatening; and we have our times of tribulation, we are to discern the signs of the times, and one of these signs is the corruption which is manifest in all the political parties. There is difficulty in exercising the right of franchise, our elections are a farce, and integrity is trodden under foot in our streets, men are elevated to high places, who scruple not to enrich themselves by plundering the public treasury. The Church is called upon to cry out against the great iniquity of our times. The speaker adverted to Ritualism being substituted in place of pure religion, and worldliness as prolific sources of evil in our day. The epithet "old fogy" might be applied to him, but he was satisfied to remain an old fogy when the age was going to the devil. Then Doctor Hodge referred to the activity of anti-Christ, which he defined as not being particularly Romanism, but whatever opposed Christ, and concluded by speaking of the opposition to the reading of the Bible, which is now being agitated in Cincinnati, remarking that it was the first gun fired by this faction, and it will be agitated in New-York. The time is coming when all that is dear to us will be menaced. "Gird your loins" for the fray.

Discourse of Rev. Dr. Willet, at St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church.

"The Lord loveth the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob."—Psalm lxxxvii., 2.

The preacher said society has no institution whose history has shown fruits like those of the Church. It is not only preeminent in excellence and authority, but peculiar in its progressiveness. This sublime establishment, after suffering an antagonism for several centuries, has maintained a unity truly astonishing. The preparations at the building of the Temple could not but impress the mind that the hand of God was at that time writing the history of the Church. If He, in His divine skill, devised the work of erecting the Temple, the Church, then, is the work of His own supervision, for it is but natural that God should be interested in the cause of this grand engine of reform. Jacob was the favored of the Almighty. His progeny had been sorely mourn and wept, respected. God had favored him, but it was all for Zion's sake—Jerusalem was the glory of the land and God the glory of the Temple. The Church has been borne through the different stages of the earth by Divine agency. The preacher reviewed the history of the Church, and the reasons which Christians have for thanking God for his dispensations.

Discourse of Rev. Dr. Andrews, in the South Third-street M. E. Church, Williamsburg.

"For thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God, the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto Himself, above all people that are upon the face of the earth."—Deuteronomy, vii., 6.

After dwelling on the mission of America, which, he said, was to secure the rights of man, the education of the masses not only of our own but of other countries, and the evangelization of the world, the preacher alluded to the question of the Bible in our public schools, and took the ground that as the State had no right to interfere with the religious rights of the people, so none of its institutions should in any way or to any extent be involved by the use of any religious book. Let the Bible be expunged from the common schools, and thus would be wiped away the flimsy excuse for upholding an alien religion at the expense of the State. The Bible read by irreligious principals, as many of our teachers were, could hardly be fraught with good. He deemed it best on every reasonable ground that the sacred regard we entertained for that great Book of books should inspire us with a determination to save it from misuse and abuse in our schools, and, most of all, not to make it a rock of offence and stumbling for others as well as for ourselves.

Presbyterian Reunion Services.

The congregations of the University-place Presbyterian Church (New School) and the Mercer-street Church (Old School) assembled yesterday morning in the former church. The meeting excited considerable interest on account of the recent reunion of the two bodies. Dr. R. BOOTH, of the Mercer-street Church, conducted the devotional exercises, and Rev. A. H. KELLOGG preached the sermon, selecting his text from Deuteronomy, xxvi., 1—11, inclusive. The preacher gave a lucid description of the Jewish feasts, particularly that of the feast of ingathering. He said that the observance of this day was not a modern institution, but had its origin in those festival occasions of the Hebrew ritual. The Jewish festival signalized many things one of which was gratitude to the Divine Being for help and deliverance, all laudable action for the promotion of truth, and materially expressed in the offer of first fruits. He commented upon the importance of setting aside a day of special prayer and thanksgiving for prosperity and happiness vouchsafed them during the past year, but they particularly, as a body, should doubly rejoice at the reunion of the two branches of their Church. The benefits to be derived from this reunion could not adequately be conceived, but the Presbyterian body would exercise in future great power in the religious field.

Observances in Brooklyn.

The day was observed in Brooklyn with the usual feasting. The churches were well attended in the morning, and the places of amusement in the afternoon and evening had large audiences. The children of the Eastern District Industrial School received their turkey dinner and pumpkin pies in their new home, the Pease Mansion, in South Third-street, near Fourth. At St. Ann's Church the first Thanksgiving chimes of the Brooklyn Heights were rung.

The following is the Thanksgiving Proclamation of the Mayor:

MAYOR'S OFFICE, BROOKLYN, Nov. 18, 1869.

The President of the United States and the Governor of the State having designated Thursday, Nov. 18, as a day of thanksgiving and prayer, I do hereby recommend to my fellow-citizens the due observance of the same. Wishes we, in common with the people of the whole country, have abundant cause for thanksgiving for the prosperity which as a nation we have enjoyed the past year, we have special cause for gratitude as citizens of Brooklyn, for the manifold blessings which during the same period have been extended to our city.

MARTIN KALBFLEISCH, Mayor.

Everything passed off pleasantly in Brooklyn, and there were no disturbances worthy of record. The Lockitt Guards made a street parade, after which they enjoyed themselves by shooting and feasting at East New-York.

Thanksgiving in New-Jersey.

The day was celebrated throughout the State of New-Jersey with becoming spirit. Feasts in which the turkey figured prominently, family and social reunions among relatives and friends long separated, political sermons from the pulpits, and other appropriate exercises were the general order of the day.

IN NEWARK COUNTY

several of the churches were opened. In the First Reformed Church, Grove-street, near Warren, in which Rev. Dr. "O. give thanks unto the Lord," in the First Presbyterian Church, on Washington-square, the ministers of the two branches of the Church was made the subject of thanksgiving. In the Third Reformed Church, on Hamilton-square, also services were held.

In addition there were parades, through the streets, of several target companies, Company E, of the Fourth Regiment N. G., S. N. J., went to Greenville; the Lincoln Guard to East Newark, and the Roundtown Rangers, after having paraded the streets of Jersey City in masquerade, to Paterson for rifle practice.

At the various places of amusement special programmes were announced, and at other places balls and soirees were held. The Jersey City Turnverein had a hop at Turn Halle, the Clipper Association and Washington Engine Company each a ball at Cooper's Hall, and the Central Railroad engineers had another at the Bay Shore House.

In Hoboken, the Liberty Guards went upon an excursion to South Orange. The Washington Mullins had a masquerade parade to the Elysian Fields. The exercises at the Fields were novel and interesting. There was first a mock court. There was then a trial of skill in the use of the brace and bit. It was provided that all winners of prizes should carry their prizes home with them; and the prizes consisted of living pigs, dead pigs, &c. The day's amusement was concluded by a first-class dance at the Colonnade Hotel. The ball was witnessed by a large concourse. Not a few of the people of the city, however, visited the race grounds at Secaucus, and witnessed the trials of speed there.

The inmates of all the charitable and reformatory institutions throughout the county were supplied with food more than usually choice.

Thanksgiving Day passed off very quietly in Newark yesterday. With the exception at an hour or two in the early part of the day, business was entirely suspended. Religious services were attended by large congregations at most of the churches in the forenoon. The after part of the day and evening were devoted to interesting discussion of turkey and other pleasant subjects. In the evening numerous balls, parties and social reunions took place.

THE DAY ELSEWHERE.

At the National Capital—The President's Dinner—Sermons in the Churches.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.—Thanksgiving Day was universally observed in this city. The Departments were closed, business was suspended, and services were held in nearly all the churches. There were many family gatherings after the good custom of New-England. At the President's House a considerable company of the personal friends of Mr. and Mrs. GRANT, among them several officers of the old staff, with their wives, sat down to a family dinner. The sermons of the day took the usual range. Dr. NEWMAN in the Metropolitan Church, discoursed eloquently on national topics and religion combined; Dr. SUNDERLAND in the First Presbyterian, discoursed with his usual force on the present phase of the Christian world, and Dr. RANKIN in the First Congregational Church, drew eloquent poetical and yet most truthful pictures of the New-England homes and the New-England Thanksgiving. The weather was bright and bracing, and the day altogether more of a holiday than Thanksgiving Days were want to be in this latitude.

Business Suspended in Boston—General Observance in Baltimore—The Day in Other Cities.

BOSTON, Nov. 18.—Thanksgiving Day was observed in the good old-fashioned style. Business was entirely suspended, and the churches well filled in the morning. The theatres were overflowed in the afternoon and evening, and there were many family gatherings and other social intercourse appropriate to the occasion. The weather was pleasant.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 18.—Thanksgiving Day was very generally observed here to-day. The public offices and places of business were closed, and the churches open for service.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 18.—The Merchants' Exchange, Post Office, the Courts and all public offices were closed to-day, and business was generally suspended. Services were held in all of the churches, and the day was observed in a quiet and decorous manner.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 18.—Thanksgiving Day was generally observed here. Public offices were closed and private business almost entirely suspended. Divine service was held in the churches of all denominations. Various military organizations paraded in the afternoon.

FORT MONROE, Nov. 18.—Re-day was observed as a national holiday. Work was suspended in the departments here. The Maryland Base-Ball Club of Baltimore arrived here this morning, and played a picked nine from the Fort. Score—Maryland, 29; Picked Nine, 3.

AUGUSTA, Ga., Nov. 18.—To-day was partially observed as Thanksgiving Day.

RICHMOND, Va., Nov. 18.—Thanksgiving Day was generally observed. Places of business were all closed. Service was held in all the churches. Fifteen members of the Washington Press arrived this morning, and were entertained by the members of the Press of this city at the Spottswood Hotel. They return to-morrow.

WILMINGTON, N. C., Nov. 18.—To-day was generally observed as Thanksgiving Day. Most of the business houses were closed, and service was held at the various churches.

SHAM AND SHODDY.

Lecture by O. H. Tiffany, D. D.

Rev. O. H. TIFFANY, D. D., formerly of Chicago, now of New-Brunswick, N. J., lectured last evening at the Thirtieth-street Methodist Episcopal Church, between Eighth and Ninth avenues, on "Sham and Shoddy, or the Pretences of Modern Life." This, he said, was a singular age, a fast age, and people nowadays were fast and singular people; and one singularity of Americans was that they wished to see themselves rather exhibited than criticised, and their laughter was one of the most singular performances imaginable. A people who could laugh at accidents and bear good natured jokes, a people having good points with foibles and weaknesses, become offensives very bad people. Americans, too, frequently made a parade of weaknesses of which they ought to be ashamed, and if a European crossed the Atlantic he was condemned as jealous and envious of prosperity if he spoke slightingly of this country. One peculiarity of this age was that people were getting the wisdom of serpents—obtaining the most show for their money, and not the most value. Reading a description of a very ordinary house, with very ordinary furniture, for sale, he found the building described as a palatial mansion; vestibules floored with marble mosaic, which were in reality made of baked clay; valuable oil paintings, in which the oil was the most valuable, and which were probably made by the same gentleman who dashed the gallery of art inside the street cars. A little house and lot would be called a villa—because it was a villainous arrangement. Going inside, he obtains a cup of coffee made from imitative stuff, to the invention of which he made no objection, because a man who made two blades of grass grow where only one grew before was considered a public benefactor. He drank out of china cups surrounded by imitation silver articles. And yet he considered these shams ought to be encouraged, because they made everything bright and clean. Then for the women, there was lace that, if real, would cost $200 a foot; but, thank God, there was an imitation article by means of which women were enabled to spare themselves the necessity of continually running into debt. Then there were Cashmere shawls that John Chinaman never saw, Indian silk that never left the Equator, and furs that would astonish the animals whose names they bore. Ladies got married; the feast and display were stunning, but the most of the articles exhibited were borrowed. There were sham opinions, sham ears and mice in front, and sham pictures in which the arrangement of perspective and prospective was absurd. There were hypocrites who loved to give charity publicly, but would cadge the street for a little fellow who might ask him for alms privately. Then there were people with sham consciences, who abused gambling, yet speculated themselves, who would not go to a theatre, but to a museum, and would condemn usury when they were not concerned themselves. There were sham authors and contributors, sham individuals who were supposed to have the wisdom of the owl, talkative men, sham teachers and clergymen, sham men of letters and science who boasted famous and infamous by advertising; lawyers who practiced only in saloons, and squires who could not draw a deed; artists who could only whitewash, and military men, who, as Anna DICKINSON said, wore military boots with lace in front. But there was one enormous sham, trading on the sufferings and necessities of the nation, and the name of that crime was known as shoddy. Shoddy was a worthless article supplied generally during the war to the poor soldiers, who were instantly shoddied to death. In supplying that shoddy in the shape of clothing, &c., men had grown rich, but the glory of the soldiers whom they injured would live long after the wealth of the robber and his family have passed into other hands. Only very recently he saw one of these shoddy families in Saratoga, and

THE REFORM CLUB.

Address of S. P. Andrews on Universal-city.

A small audience gathered at Plimpton Hall last evening to listen to an address by Mr. STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS on the subject of Reform. In the course of his remarks the gentleman made use of the following language, which may be understood if it may:

"The Pantarchy is a society, already some years in existence germinally, whose special sphere of operations it is to plan and effect the practical unity of all other religious, political and social institutions and movements throughout the whole world, and so to found the future planetary nation, or the United States of the World. The leading officer of the Pantarchy is necessarily self-elected, or a volunteer, as there is as yet no working constituency of the new nation to accept the small body of herests which the self-constituted chief may be fortunate enough to draw to his immediate standard for the purpose of fostering and forwarding the ulterior idea. The instrumentality relied on to effect the result aimed at is the new sense of universology, by which it is believed that it will, for the first time, become practicable to reconcile and render cooperative all the different parties, sects and minor nationalities of the world in one grand and beneficent nationality. To effect this grand reconciliation is the special function assumed by the Pantarchy, which should, therefore, furnish the scientific law of organization to all the divisions, or segments, of the grand army of human progression. In other words, it is the object of the Pantarchy to bring about, by scientific adjustments, a general unity and cooperation ultimately among all the several portions of mankind, but especially and immediately among the different organizations and combined movements which now exist confusedly among reformers themselves, whose main object—the amelioration of the condition of humanity—is confessedly the same. The method proposed is not that of disciplinar or hindering any of those special movements, but that of combining them in a grand army of reform, of which the special movements will be recognized, and cooperative divisions or sections, each covering the ground of their own specialty. First, an army of moral and intellectual conquest, it is believed that this immense body of reformers, if they can exhibit the competency merely to organize themselves, may rise almost immediately into the all-powerful and recognized spiritual government of the world. The Pantarchy is, therefore, a new specialty among reform movements, which specialty is the specialty of universality in question. It will endeavor through universal science, specialized as the science of organization, and through integralism or all-sidedness, as a philosophy, to educe a central and organic unity out of the infinite and divergent variety of the grand progressive movements of this age."

Arrest of a River Pirate—Recovery of Stolen Property.

For several days past the Headquarters detectives knew that a quantity of chronometers, barometers and French clocks in fancy cases were being offered for sale in different parts of the City, at prices far beneath the real value of the goods. Detectives EUSTACE, TILLY and TUELEY took the matter in hand, and traced the goods through various channels to the possession of MICHAEL SHANNON, a notorious river thief, residing on the top floor of the premises on the southeast corner of Houston and West streets. They paid SHANNON a visit at an early hour yesterday morning, found him in bed, and secured him without much resistance. In searching the premises these officers found a trunk and packages containing about $2,000 worth of property similar to that already described, which they removed, with their prisoner, to the Central Office. SHANNON will be detained there until an effort to find an owner is made.

Among the property was found a French cavalry pistol, pierced in the chamber for eighteen charges, a most formidable and unique weapon. This revolver and one of Remington's make were both loaded, and near at hand, though SHANNON could not use them, owing to his being so effectually surprised. The prisoner stated that the goods were left with him by a party whose name he refuses to divulge.

Assaults and Affrays.

MARTIN GERMAN quarreled with his wife CATHERINE, yesterday, at No. 39 Elm-street, when he seized a hatchet and struck her several times on the head, causing severe and dangerous scalp wounds. The wounded woman was attended by a physician, and removed to Bellevue Hospital. The husband was arrested and locked up in the Sixth Ward Station House.

A desperate affray occurred yesterday afternoon at Bellevue Garden between the members of two rival target companies, called the "Carrol Rangers" and the "Garryowen Guards." Two or three of the guardsmen were severely handled, and removed to their homes by friends. No arrests were made.

JAMES DERMODY, SIMON THOMAS and CHARLES MCCABE, all noted young Fourth Ward roughs, made an assault yesterday on the shoe store of WM. LILLIE, at No. 8 Rose-street. The shoemaker and his journeyman, RUDOLPH HANKE, resisted the attack as best they might, when DERMODY was struck on the head by a last and severely wounded. All three of the rowdies were arrested.

Base Ball—Eckfords vs. Mutuals.

A match took place yesterday afternoon at the Union grounds, Williamsburg, between the Eckford and Mutual Clubs. There was quite a large attendance of spectators. The ground was rather slippery, in consequence of the late heavy rains. Much interest was shown in the match and the good players were frequently applauded. The betting was not very active, as the course of the game was decididly against the Mutuals. The following was the record:

	1st.	2d.	3d.	4th.	5th.	6th.	7th.	8th.
Eckford	3	0	1	0	2	0	1	4	11
Mutual	0	0	1	1	0	0	1	0	4

Robbery on a Street Car.

While PATRICK MURPHY, of No. 145 Fourth-avenue, was riding up town last evening in a Forty-second-street cross-town car, in company with his wife and children, an unknown man, fashionably dressed, who sat near them, managed to cut the strap of a leather satchel which Mrs. MURPHY carried on her arm, and escaped with it from the car before the larceny was discovered. The satchel contained a set of false teeth, a gold watch and chain valued at $170, and a pair of gold bracelets valued at $75. Mr. MURPHY notified the Police, who have but slight hopes of discovering the adroit thief.

OF ILLINOIS,

PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST PAYABLE IN GOLD AT THE FARMERS' LOAN AND TRUST COMPANY, NEW-YORK. COUPONS PAYABLE APRIL AND OCTOBER 1.

FREE OF GOVERNMENT TAX.

THESE BONDS CAN BE REGISTERED.

CAPITAL STOCK.....$8,000,000.

TOTAL ISSUE OF BONDS.....$3,000,000.

Length of road, 117 1-10 miles. The bonds are limited to less than $14,000 per mile, and are secured by a First Mortgage on the entire property of the Company, which cost about $60,000 per mile, and which, we can say with the utmost confidence, will be worth more after the completion of the road at least double the cost. The consolidation of this line with the Indianapolis, Crawfordsville and Danville Road, places over two hundred miles under one management, and furnishes still further security to the bondholders, these bonds having been assumed (a virtual guarantee) by the Consolidated Company, under the name of the Indianapolis, Bloomington and Western Railroad Company. This is the east and west road, connecting with direct lines to Boston, New-York, Philadelphia and Baltimore on the east, and with the Pacific Roads on the west. It runs through the richest and most populous district of Illinois, the local business of which will be more than sufficient to sustain it, while the through business (which will be limited only by the capacity of the road) must make it one of the best paying railways in the country. The grading part of the road is now finished, and the balance will be completed and thoroughly equipped by the 1st of January next.

Over two-thirds of the loan has been taken by actual investors. We continue to offer, for the present, the balance at 90 and accrued interest in currency, at which price they pay about 10 per cent. interest in currency—50 per cent. more than Government. The high premium which the stock of all the East and West roads in Illinois commands justifies the belief that the stock of this road will also soon sell above par, thus making the convertible clause of the bond a valuable option.

All marketable securities received in exchange at the highest market rates. Bonds forwarded by express free of charge. Pamphlets containing full particulars furnished on application by the undersigned financial agents of the Company.
